PREFACE.

This new edition of the so-called Rituale Ecclesiae Dunelmensis has been edited for the Surtees Society by Dr. U. Lindelöf, Professor of English Philology in the University of Helsingfors, who, at an earlier date, has paid special attention to the philological and linguistic peculiarities of the interlinear English version of the Latin text. For the care and scholarship with which he has thoroughly revised the earlier edition published by the Society and has produced an accurate and trustworthy text, our gratitude is due. While he has avoided all emendations which, however justifiable, would affect the literal fidelity of the text to its original, he has supplied notes upon the errors and doubtful readings of the MS. in an appendix to the volume.

Professor Lindelöf has also written the part of the introduction which deals with certain palaeographic and linguistic features of the book. Although its interest from a liturgical and historical point of view is of less significance, it has been thought advisable, for the sake of completeness, to include a general account of its contents from this standpoint, which, together with an index of the Latin collects and chapters, has been written by the Secretary of the Society, and forms the opening part of the introduction to the present volume.

The thanks of the Society are due to the Dean and Chapter of Durham and to their honorary librarian, Mr. J. Meade Falkner, for giving special facilities for the consultation of the original MS. by the editor. Professor E. V. Gordon, of the University of Leeds, has given valuable assistance, and Dr. Craster and Mr. Gambier-Parry, of the Bodleian Library, have read the proofs of the earlier part of the introduction and furnished helpful suggestions. The plates, illustrating typical pages of the volume, are the work of Mr. Macbeth, whose facsimile of the Durham Liber Vitae is already in the hands of members.

INTRODUCTION.

CHAPTER I.

(By A. Hamilton Thompson.)

The MS. A. iv, 19, in the library of the Dean and Chapter of Durham was edited for the Surtees Society in 1840 by Joseph Stevenson under the somewhat misleading title Rituale Ecclesiae Dunelmensis. As Lingard observed, in his brief but admirable account of the book, the publication was a disappointment to those who expected to find in it "the order of divine service, and of the administration of the sacraments, according to the form practised in the English church before the Conquest."[1] The fragmentary and miscellaneous character of its contents rendered it an imperfect example of the type of service-book which it represents; and that type is concerned merely with a limited selection of liturgical forms. Stevenson's edition, moreover, did nothing more than reproduce the text with a short and not very enlightening introduction, and without any critical apparatus. The editor was not impeccable, and to the numerous errors of the MS. he added mistakes and misreadings of his own. The unsatisfactory nature of his work has long been recognised by scholars, and the present edition is intended to remedy its defects, and in particular to supply a more trustworthy version of the interlinear translation of some four-fifths of the MS. executed by a Northumbrian scribe in the tenth century.

At the same time, it is possible to underrate Stevenson's method of editing. Dr. W. H. Frere, now Bishop of Truro, in his introduction to the edition of The Leofric Collectar published by the Henry Bradshaw Society, has given a summary description of the volume and its contents. With reference to the addenda, which constitute the second and larger half of the book, he says: "the printed edition suffers here more than elsewhere from the scribe's habit of omitting titles, and the editor's unintelligent dependence upon such titles as are given."[2] It is true that Stevenson's neglect to furnish any critical commentary left much to be desired, but this gives no positive ground for depreciating his intelligence. As an editor, he doubtless suffered from that want of minute accuracy in which, in a far from exacting age, he was by no means unique; but his work was a genuine endeavour to reproduce the MS. as he found it. If he inadvertently added to its faults, he at any rate refrained from confounding the text by importing emendations into it. In the present edition the original text has been treated by Professor Lindelöf with a more sedulous accuracy, but its errors have been allowed to stand, and for corrections the reader must look to the notes. It would have been easy to polish the surface of the text with wholesale emendations, but its individuality would thus have been destroyed; and it is no part of the duties of an editor to conceal the deficiencies of a MS. which is unique.

Both Lingard and Dr. Frere have analysed the contents of the book, and Dr. Frere's analysis, though brief, has a special value as the work of one of the most learned liturgical scholars of the present day. The volume has been known so long as the Durham Ritual that, in spite of the obvious drawbacks of the title, it has been considered unadvisable to change it for the purposes of a new edition; while the complex character of its composition, as it has come down to us, prevents the attribution to it of any more comprehensive or satisfactory title. The foundation of the work, however, is a Collectar or compilation of the collects and short chapters used at the day-hours throughout the year, to which a large amount of supplementary matter has been added. It is, in short, a book for use by the officiant at choir services, containing those portions of the service which are proper to him, together with a number of miscellaneous prayers for special occasions, and additions which serve as cues to his part.

Owing to the loss of a number of leaves, the Collectar is incomplete. The whole work actually consists of three separate parts, of the contents of which an account may be given before proceeding to further details.

A. Part I (pp. 1–138) comprises the collects and chapters for the various seasons of the year, with additional matter, arranged as follows: (1) Temporale (pp. 1–43); (2) Sanctorale (pp. 43–80); (3) Commune Sanctorum (pp. 81–94); (4) Benedictions (pp. 95–125); (5) Miscellaneous addenda (pp. 126–138).

(1) The Temporale at present begins among the little chapters for the Epiphany, followed by the collects (pp. 1–3), the chapters and collects for the Purification (pp. 3, 4), and the chapters for Ash Wednesday (p. 5). A return is made at this point to the chapters for Septuagesima (pp. 5, 6) and Sexagesima (p. 6), with the collects from Septuagesima to the beginning of Lent (pp. 6–8), which are succeeded by the collects for Ash Wednesday and the three days following (pp. 8, 9). The group of Lenten chapters (pp. 9–14) and the corresponding group of collects (pp. 14–18) cover the period from the first Sunday to the end of the fourth week in Lent, the chapters and collects for Passiontide (pp. 18–24) being arranged in a series of separate groups. The Eastertide chapters follow (pp. 24–29), with a large group of collects (pp. 29–36), headed by a rubric for Easter Even (p. 29) and embracing the whole of the season. There is an hiatus in this series (p. 32), and, after the opening chapters for the Litania major of Rogationtide (p. 36), there is a long gap which brings the order of the seasons to an abrupt end. The MS. is resumed with the conclusion of a collect in a series of Orationes quotidianae (pp. 36–39), some of which are missing (p. 38), followed by another general series pro peccatis (pp. 39–43).

(2) The Sanctorale, beginning with St. Stephen (26 Dec.) and ending with St. Thomas the Apostle (21 Dec.), is almost complete. There are, however, a gap in the August feasts (p. 64), between the rubric of St. Stephen, bishop and martyr (2 Aug.) and the incomplete collects for St. Lawrence (10 Aug.), and another in the September feasts (p. 70), between the collects for the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin (8 Sept.) and the incomplete chapters for Michaelmas (29 Sept.). Special chapters are provided only for the principal feasts, viz. St. Stephen (26 Dec., pp. 43, 44), St. John the Evangelist (27 Dec., pp. 45, 46), the Innocents (28 Dec., pp. 47, 48), the Nativity of St. John Baptist (24 June, p. 55), St. Peter (29 June, pp. 57, 58), St. Paul (30 June, pp. 59, 60), the octaves of St. Peter and St. Paul (6 July, p. 61), the Assumption (15 Aug., p. 65), the Nativity of the Virgin (8 Sept., pp. 68, 69), St. Michael (29 Sept., pp. 70, 71), and St. Andrew (30 Nov., pp. 78, 79). As already noted, the Purification is provided for in the Temporale.

(3) The groups of chapters and collects which constitute the Commune Sanctorum break off short towards the end of the collects for many martyrs, and conclude with a section of collects ad crucem salutandam (pp. 93, 94).

(4) The benedictions, opening with two collects for the blessing of palms on Palm Sunday (p. 95), are of a miscellaneous character, and include a full series of benedictions and collects for the hallowing of virgins (pp. 103–106) and, with the epistle and gospel, for the solemnisation of matrimony (pp. 106–111). The hymn Auctor salutis unicus is inserted on pp. 111–112. The rubrical titles indicate the nature of the various benedictions, but are occasionally omitted. Thus the collect Omnipotens sempiterne deus (p. 95) belongs to the series which follows, under various rubrics, on pp. 96, 97, and is repeated on p. 97 under the rubric Ora[tio] ad capilaturam. The collect with a similar beginning on p. 103, following a set of prayers for ordeals by water, is that found in the Gelasian Sacramentary for the reconciliation of penitents in Holy week. The rubric of the prayer and exorcism for ordeal by hot iron (pp. 112, 113) is defective. The English benediction on p. 114 appears to be for common use before any form of ordeal. On p. 123 the first two collects, like the last on p. 122, are for use when holy water is sprinkled in a house. They are followed (pp. 123, 124), without any rubric, by collects for the successive hours of the day from prime to compline, two collects for the protection and intercession of the apostles (p. 124: Exaudi nos deus and Omnipotens sempiterne deus qui nos omnium), collects of oblation and pro peccatis (pp. 124, 125), and the prayer against poison traditionally ascribed to St. John the Evangelist when he drank the poisoned cup at Ephesus (p. 125).[1]

(5) The addenda include a series of benedictions before the lessons for the various seasons (pp. 126–129); benedictions of honey and milk, fruit and bread, and wells (pp. 129–131); two miscellaneous collects (p. 131); the hymn Auctor salutis (pp. 131, 132; also on pp. 111, 112); the key-words for the responsories, versicles and antiphons from the apocryphal histories and prophetical lessons (pp. 132–135); and the hymns Audi benigne, Vexilla regis, and Ad cenam agni, for Lent, Passion-tide, and Eastertide respectively (pp. 135–138).

B. Part II (pp. 138–162), owing to the mistake in the arrangement of the leaves for binding, begins on p. 145 with a series of benedictions (pp. 145–148). At the foot of p. 148 the paragraph OR' Uespertine laudis officia introduces vesper collects, followed by memorials of the Cross (pp. 148, 149), and a second set, followed by memorials of the Cross, St. Michael, the Blessed Virgin, the saints, and the dead (pp. 149–158), the mass of the Holy Trinity (pp. 158, 159), and masses belonging to the Commune sanctorum. These stop short on p. 162 at the beginning of the epistle for many martyrs (Hebr. xi, 36); but, on turning back to p. 138, we find this continued without a break, and this series of masses proceeds as far as p. 143. On pp. 143–145 collects for the day-hours are added upon a spare leaf in the original.

C. Part III (pp. 162–199) begins with a group of hymns for prime, terce, sext, nones and Sundays (pp. 162–166). After a three-fold general benediction inserted on p. 166 come the little chapters, confiteor, etc., for prime (pp. 166–172), the little chapters for terce, sext, and nones (pp. 172, 173), suffrages for the faithful departed and for absent brethren (pp. 173, 174), collects and suffrages for vespers (pp. 174–180), hymn, collect, etc., for compline (pp. 180–182), and the incipits of psalms for prime and other hours (pp. 183, 184). On p. 185 are the four collects of St. Cuthbert with the English memorandum recording the date of their insertion. The incipits of the antiphons, versicles and responsories at matins and lauds for the first three and (in part) the fourth Sundays in Advent (pp. 185–187) are a further insertion. The rest of the matter is miscellaneous and non-liturgical; an alphabetical list of abbreviations and suspensions of Latin words (pp. 187–192), notes on the creation of Adam and the nature of the winds (p. 192), on Roman imperial dignities (pp. 192, 193), on titles of kings (p. 193), on the orders and dignities of the Church (pp. 193, 194), with additional notes on other ecclesiastical titles, etc. (p. 195), the burial-places of the apostles (pp. 195–197), concluding with an alphabet of words composed on the general theme of sin and redemption (pp. 197–199), and a summary of the numbers of the canons of the four Gospels (p. 199).

The chief feature of the Collectar which distinguishes it from later books of the same type is the treatment of the chapters and collects for the seasons as compact blocks, without indication of the special days or hours at which they may be used. Dr. Frere has pointed out that the Durham book thus represents an earlier stage of this type of liturgical compilation than the eleventh-century Leofric Collectar, which was drawn up for the secular church of Exeter, and the Wulfstan Collectar, which came from the monastic church of Worcester. In this respect it corresponds to the arrangement of the Liber Capitularis of Stephen of Tongres, which Dr. Frere regards as the common source of the whole group. This work, it is true, is known to us only by description. Its compiler was bishop of Tongres, i.e. of the see which was finally settled at Liége, from 902 to 920. About the beginning of the fifteenth century, Radulfus de Rivo, dean of Tongres, quotes an important passage from the preface, addressed by Stephen to Robert, bishop of Metz, in which the general scheme of the book is given, followed by a summary index of its contents. These consisted of (1) the proper chapters, etc., for the principal feasts from Trinity to St. Andrew's day, including also the Invention of the Cross and all four feasts of the Blessed Virgin; (2) Commune Sanctorum; (3) Temporale; (4) Sanctorale, described generally as Collectae de omnibus propriis festivitatibus totius anni. The comments by the dean of Tongres show that, while in his day there was some variation in local usage throughout the Netherlands, Stephen's book was still widely used in the churches of the district.

All the authorities, however, who mention this Liége book imply definitely that, in addition to collects and chapters, it included the versicles and responds appropriate to each chapter. Thus Stephen in his preface says: per singulos horarum cursus singula capita cum responsoriis vel versibus sive etiam collectis statui. This general account of the contents is borne out by the allusions made by Folcuin and Sigebert of Gembloux. On the other hand, versicles and responds are entirely omitted from the first and principal part of the Durham book and appear only in the additional sections. This omission does not necessarily exclude it from the group associated with the Liége Liber Capitularis, but it is a departure from the plan followed by Stephen and pursued during the following century in the Collectars of Leofric and Wulfstan.

Hitherto we have referred to the MS. as the Durham book. But Durham was merely its eventual home. The book itself was compiled at an earlier date than the settlement of the congregation of St. Cuthbert at Durham towards the close of the tenth century. There can be no doubt that it, or at any rate part of it, was at Chester-le-Street before the migration to Durham: the English memorandum appended to the four St. Cuthbert collects on p. 185, and the interpolated mention of Aldhun, the bishop under whom that migration took place (p. 143), are proof of this. It may fairly be postulated that the book was in existence and was in the North of England during the last twenty or thirty years of the tenth century, if not earlier. It is necessary, however, to say here that the Collectar which forms the foundation and most essential portion of the MS. bears no trace of an origin among the congregation of St. Cuthbert. It was composed elsewhere and at an earlier period, and found its way to Chester-le-Street by some unexplained means.

This part of the introduction is not concerned with the palaeographical evidence by which the date and growth of the MS. may be determined. Liturgically, however, it falls into line with the compilations of which Stephen's book appears to have been the archetype, by the substitution of chapters taken from the prophetical books and epistles for those taken from the historical books of the Old Testament, during the seasons when the lesson at matins was historical. If, therefore, it was not directly influenced from Tongres or Liége, it shows at all events the presence of influences which were affecting the composition of similar books at the beginning of the tenth century. As has been said already, it contains no sign that it was compiled in the North of England, or in England at all. Among the festivals which find a place in it, there is none which is distinctively English. The collects for the feast of St. Cuthbert were inserted among the supplementary matter, in order to supply a defect which would be felt in the chief centre of his cult. On the other hand, it shows no feature which connects it directly with the Low Countries. In this respect, however, important evidence is wanting. Among the gaps in the MS. there is one in the Sanctorale for September, after the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin (8 September). The next leaf begins in the middle of one of the chapters for Michaelmas (p. 70). Thus, if there was any commemoration of St. Lambert, the patron saint of Stephen's diocese, whose feast was celebrated on 17 September, it has disappeared.

On the other hand, while the order of feasts in the Sanctorale corresponds generally to that of the Sacramentaries originating in Roman use, it is marked by special features which indicate a possibly Gallican source. Lingard remarked that, of the collects in the first part of the book, there are not a dozen which may not be found in the Leonine, Gelasian and Gregorian Sacramentaries. This understates the number of exceptions; but it is at any rate clear that the compiler founded his material upon a composite Sacramentary, in which such sources were mingled. But a special and exceptional prominence is given to St. Martin. His summer and winter feasts are alike commemorated, his Translation on 4 July by a single collect (p. 62), his Nativity on 11 November by the unusual complement of six collects (pp. 76, 77), which certainly would not have been given in a book for use outside a church where he was specially honoured. Moreover, the second of the six collects appears to have been composed for the use of such a church upon an occasion when it was visited by a large number of worshippers, as it makes special mention of omnes qui ad eiusdem conuenerunt solemnitatem, a phrase hardly intended for a church in which he was merely commemorated like any other saint. There is thus some reason for concluding, with Lingard, that the Collectar was a copy of an original compiled for use in the famous church of St. Martin at Tours, to which Lingard noticed that the phrase in the third collect, per intercessionem eiusdem protectoris nostri, was peculiarly appropriate.

To say more than this would be to venture too far upon the path of conjecture. The commemoration of St. Denis and his companions on 9 October (p. 72) and of St. Quintin on 31 October (p. 73) may also point to a Gallican origin. It may be noted, however, that, if Tours was the ultimate source from which the Collectar, or some of its special contents, were derived, there is still the possibility that this copy was actually made for the use of some other church dedicated to St. Martin, and, taking into account the influence of the Liber Capitularis of Stephen of Tongres upon this class of service-book, that this church may have been the church of St. Martin at Liége.[1] In this case, the further possibility arises that the original from which the collects for 11 November were taken was a Sacramentary embodying collects in use at Tours, and that the Collectar itself was compiled at Liége or in the neighbourhood at the time when such books were coming into fashion in the dioceses of the Low Countries.

The period at which we have certain knowledge that the book had arrived in England, viz. the later part of the tenth century, is the era of ecclesiastical reform under the guidance of Dunstan and Æthelwold, when the efforts of the English reformers were supplemented by encouragement from the churches of the Low Countries and of the Loire region. The Collectar may thus have reached England from either of these districts. It remains to consider the date of the entry by which its presence in this country may be determined.

This is the remarkable note which follows the four collects for the intercession of St. Cuthbert (p. 185). It runs as follows:

> Besuðan wudigan gæte æt áclee on westsæxum on laurentius mæssan daegi . on wodnes dægi ælfsige ðæm biscope in his getélde aldred se profast ðas feower collectæ on fif næht áldne mona ær underne . awrat.

[1] The collegiate church of St. Martin at Liége was founded by Eraclius, bishop of Liége c. 960–971 (Gallia Christ., iii, 844). The date seems almost too recent, considering the probable date of the entry on page 185, for a book composed for use in this church to have found its way to England.

The translation may be given thus:

> To the south of Woody Gate at Aclee in Wessex on St. Lawrence's mass-day, on Wednesday, for Ælfsige the bishop in his tent Aldred the provost wrote these four collects, when the moon was five nights old[1] before terce.

The days of the week and month are obviously Wednesday, 10 August, and the fortunate notice of the age of the moon limits it to certain years. The choice of these is further limited by the mention of the bishop. There were three bishops of the name of Ælfsige, viz. Ælfsige, bishop of Winchester 951–959, Ælfsige II, bishop of Winchester c. 1012–1032, and Ælfsige, bishop of Chester-le-Street 968–990. The fact that the entry was made in Wessex suggests at first sight a bishop of Winchester rather than Chester-le-Street; but the special honour paid to St. Cuthbert points, on the other hand, to Chester-le-Street rather than Winchester. As a matter of fact, the claims of Winchester can be dismissed. St. Lawrence's day fell on a Wednesday in 953 and 959, and again in 1015, 1020, and 1026, but the age of the moon corresponds with none of these dates. But, while Ælfsige was bishop of Chester-le-Street, St. Lawrence's day occurred three times on a Wednesday, viz. in 970, 981, and 987. The last of these dates may be ruled out, as the moon was then in its second quarter; but in 970 it was new on 6 August, and in 981 on 5 August. Aldred's note at this point becomes somewhat ambiguous. It was written before 9 a.m. on 10 August, and, though in 970 that day was the "fifth night" of the new moon, it should not be forgotten that St. Lawrence's mass-day had its liturgical beginning at vespers the evening before, and that "fif næht áldne mona" may therefore refer to that evening, which would be true of 981. In a note upon the passage,[2] Felix Liebermann argued on behalf of 970, and rejected 981 and 987, "because in those years on 10 August six to eleven days were already passed since the new moon." In 981, however, only five days had passed, and, although the general evidence is in favour of 970, this should not be left out of consideration.

There can be little doubt with regard to the identity of the place where the note was written. In a note to his edition of Asser's Vita Alfredi, W. H. Stevenson, commenting upon the traditional identification of Aclea, the site of the battle between Ethelwulf and the Danes in 851, with Ockley in Surrey, referred to the present passage, and suggested that Wudiga Gæt is Woodyates, on the road from Salisbury to Blandford and on the confines of Wiltshire and Dorset. He remarked that "close by is a place called Oakley."[1] At Woodyates the modern road follows the line of the Roman road from Old Sarum to Dorchester, and here General Pitt-Rivers identified the site of the intermediate Roman station of Vindogladia. About a mile south of the Woodyates inn, this road passes over Oakley Down, a wide stretch of unenclosed land thickly covered with tumuli, and, near this point, is crossed by another old track leading from Cranborne to Shaftesbury. Whether Oakley Down is the site of the battle of 851 is another question; but the relation of Oakley Down to Woodyates is exactly that which is indicated by Aldred's note.

[1] Literally "on a five-night-old moon."

Liebermann, arguing for the 970 date, said: "It is precisely in this year that we have the single historical document containing the name of Ælfsige, in which, in company with twelve bishops, twelve abbots and others, he witnesses a donation of Eadgar to Ely, and therefore at aWitenagemot. Such a meeting often took place at Ockley in Surrey, where, according to the note in question, the bishop of Durham's tent stood."

The document to which Liebermann refers is printed by Kemble and Birch, and is a grant of land at Stoke-by-Nayland in Suffolk made by Eadgar to the monastery of Ely.[2] It is subscribed by Dunstan and twelve other bishops, of whom the last appears in Birch's text, and apparently in all copies of the charter but that in Liber Eliensis, as Ælfrige.[3] The contemporary Ælfric, bishop of Elmham, is generally identified with the "Wuluwric" of this charter; and Searle in his lists of Anglo-Saxon bishops accepts this, while he appears to suspend judgment upon the identity of "Ælfrige" with Ælfsige of Chester-le-Street, in spite of the reading in Liber Eliensis.[4] There is, however, no good evidence for such a name as Ælfrige, nor can it be accounted for on etymological grounds; and it may be reasonably assumed that the form is due to a misreading of the s in Ælfsige as r. The full date of the charter is not given, but it must have been before the death in 970 of one of the signatories, Oswulf, bishop of Ramsbury; but at what period of the year he died we do not know.

It is perhaps unnecessary to say much of Liebermann's acceptance of the purely haphazard identification of Aclee in Wessex with Ockley in Surrey. This conjecture was endorsed by most writers, until W. H. Stevenson showed that the old forms of the name Ockley laid it open to doubt. But, even if it may be argued that Ockley, close to the junction of Stane Street with another Roman road coming from the north-west, was the site of the battle between the men of Wessex and the Danes, it does not follow that it was the only Aclea. Dr. Plummer's note in Two Saxon Chronicles Parallel suggests that Wudiga Gæt is Newdigate, about two miles E.N.E. of Ockley[1]; but this is merely to supply a very questionable identification, as compared with one which is satisfactory in name and site alike.

There is also some looseness in Liebermann's statement that Witenagemots were often held at the spot, assumed to be Ockley, where Ælfsige's tent was pitched. Ecclesiastical synods were held, under the presidency of Archbishop Jaenberht, in 782, 787, 788, and 789, at a place called Aclea (Æcleah, Acleth). In 816 Archbishop Wulfred held a synod in loco praeclaro æt Æclea.[2] The meetings in 805 in celeberrimo loco Hacleah nominato, and in 824 in loco celebri ubi dicitur Acleah, were apparently of a wider character than synodal; but Haddan and Stubbs hesitated to call either a Witenagemot without qualification.[3] Further, they refrained from identifying the place positively, save in one instance, the synod of 787. Then, relying presumably upon a grant made by Offa to Chertsey Abbey, which exists in a form probably forged, they settled upon Ockley, which is in the same county as Chertsey; although at a considerable distance from it.[4] At the dates referred to, however, we can hardly look for the locus praeclarus æt Acleah in a spot which was remote both from Canterbury and from the Mercian influence under which most of these synods and meetings were conducted. It is possible that the older antiquaries, who identified it with Oakley, near Gravesend, were not far wrong[5]; and it is also possible that the specific reference of the Durham

[1] Two Saxon Chronicles, ii, 78. Stevenson, ut sup., points out that Newdigate (Niwedan-geate) could not be confused with a form derived from Wudiga.

[2] See Haddan and Stubbs, Councils, iii, 439, 462–5.

[3] Ibid., iii, 558–9, 595.

[4] Ibid., iii, 439, 463–4. Reasons are given (ibid., iii, 464) for the conjecture that the locus qui dicitur Acleth of 789 may have been the meeting-place of a northern synod at Aycliffe.

[5] See ibid., iii, 559, where it is shown that the probable date of the synod at "Hacleah" in 805 involves the conclusion that the place was within two or three days' journey (at most) from Canterbury.

book to Aclee in Wessex may distinguish Oakley Down from the famous Aclea of the synods.

In 869, however, eighteen years after the battle of Aclea, when the royal house of Wessex had risen to the supreme position in England, a Witenagemot, at which the bishops of Winchester and Sherborne were present, was held under Æthelred of Wessex at Wudiga Gæt. Here we have a much closer point of contact with Aldred's note; and there is good ground for supposing that here, a century before 970, we have a mention of Woodyates. If we are to presume that the Aclea of the synods is the Aclee of the Durham Ritual, and consequently that the locus praeclarus was Oakley Down, it is curious that Woodyates, close by, takes its place in 869, without any allusion to Aclea. Further, if Ælfsige's tent was pitched on Oakley Down in 970 or 981, the mention of its geographical relation to Woodyates suggests that on this occasion Woodyates, the site of the meeting of the West Saxon Witan in 869, was the centre of the synod or Witenagemot, whichever it was, for which we can hardly doubt that he was present.

There seems, however, to be no other evidence for such an assembly at this spot in either of the years above mentioned. Nor does the scanty historical information concerning Ælfsige afford help towards the determination of a date. Apart from notices of his accession and death, only one incident of his episcopate is recorded. It is said, in an anonymous tract included in the printed editions of Symeon of Durham, that Eadulf and Oslac, the two earls between whom Northumbria was divided after the fall of the kingdom in 966, were accompanied by Ælfsige when they brought Kenneth, king of Scots, to do homage to Eadgar. "Isti duo comites cum Elfsio, qui apud Sanctum Cuthbertum episcopus fuerat, perduxerunt Kynet regem Scottorum ad regem Eadgarum. Qui, cum illi fecisset hominium, dedit ei rex Eadgarus Lodoneium et multo cum honore remisit ad propria."[1] Neither the date nor the place at which this event occurred is known. Roger of Wendover mentions it in 975, the year of Eadgar's death and of the expulsion of Oslac from his earldom; and in his account Eadulf is the only one of the two earls who is named. This, however, does not preclude an earlier date; but, as Kenneth II did not become king of Scots until 971, the incident can hardly be referred with certainty to 970. It is possible that the protection of Eadgar and the grant of Lothian anticipated and helped to secure Kenneth's claim to the Scottish throne; but this is merely conjecture. In any case, all that can be said is that Ælfsige came into personal communication with Eadgar, probably in Wessex, between 970 and 975, and, if this was in 970, it may have been at Woodyates in August. But this does not prove the date or exclude the possibility that Aldred's note may refer to 981.

As for Aldred himself, we may reasonably assume that he was the acting head, under the bishop, of the community at Chester-le-Street. The title provost was appropriate to the head of an establishment which, so far as we know anything of its constitution, was at this date in the somewhat ambiguous condition, neither regular nor entirely secular, which prevailed in tenth-century minsters untouched by the reforming influence of Dunstan and Æthelwold. Aldred may have accompanied the bishop on his southern journey as chaplain and secretary. There are reasons against what otherwise might have been reasonably supposed, that, during that journey, the Collectar was acquired for the bishop. At any rate, compiled abroad, it contained no provision for the festivals of English saints; and, although the anniversary of St. Cuthbert (20 March) was as yet far off in August—the feast of his Translation (4 September) was not celebrated until a later period, and originated at Durham—Aldred probably wrote down the collects in order that the book might not be without commemoration of the saint to whose service he and his master, and the community to which they belonged, were in private duty bound.

The miscellaneous additions at the end of the volume were drawn from various sources, and were added as casual memoranda which have nothing to do with the rest of the book. Professor Lindelöf has called my attention to a parallel to the curious passage on p. 192, "De octo pondera (sic) de quibus factus est Adam," from J. M. Kemble's edition of The Dialogue of Salomon and Saturnus (Ælfric Soc., Nos. 8–13, 1845–7, pp. 180, 181). The English translation runs:

> Tell me the substance of which Adam, the first man, was made?
> I tell thee, of eight pounds by weight.
> Tell me, what are they called?
> I tell thee, the first was a pound of earth, of which his flesh was made; the second was a pound of fire, hence his blood came red and hot; the third was a pound of wind, and thence his breathing was given him; the fourth was a pound of the welkin, thence was his unsteadiness of mood given him; the fifth was a pound of grace, whence were given him his fat and growth; the sixth was a pound of blossoms, whence were given him the variety of his eyes; the seventh was a pound of dew, whence he got his sweat; the eighth was a pound of salt, and thence were his tears salt.

In his note on this passage Kemble deals with earlier speculations regarding this problem. The exact origin of the remaining passages is not so easy to determine. The second portion of the passage on p. 193, beginning Apud hebreos is partially taken from St. Jerome in Ezechielem, lib. III (xxiii, 22 sqq.).[1] The section De gradibus æcclessiæ (p. 193) is founded upon some compilation or notes derived partly from Isidore De ecclesiasticis officiis, lib. II, from which a few definitions are borrowed literally.[2] The definition of exorcista (p. 194) occurs in Rabanus Maurus De clericorum institutione, i, 10[3]; and it is probable either that the writer made these notes from his own reading, or that he used a treatise founded, like those of Isidore and Rabanus, upon the works of the early Fathers. Similarly, the notes upon the burial-places of the apostles come from a source such as was employed by Freculf, bishop of Lisieux, a contemporary of Rabanus, in his Chronicon II, ii, 4[4]; Freculf, however, was not the direct source in this case, as a comparison of the two passages clearly shows. I have been unable to find any parallel to the alphabetical passage on pages 196, 197, and am inclined to think that it is an original composition, of which the general theme is sin and redemption. The apparent age of Eve at her creation is that attributed to Adam in The Dialogue of Salomon and Saturnus. It might be possible to discover the ultimate origin of all these notes in widely-scattered passages; but it would be impossible to state with certainty whether they are the result of miscellaneous reading, or merely extracts from some encyclopaedic compilation which has now disappeared.

The index of liturgical forms which concludes this part of the introduction is divided into four sections, viz. (A) collects and benedictions; (B) short chapters and gospels; (C) antiphons, versicles, psalms, and other miscellaneous forms; (D) hymns. In each case the forms given are those of the text without emendation. In index (B) prefatory forms in common use, such as Fratres and Haec dicit Dominus, are omitted.

CHAPTER II.

(By U. Lindelöf.)

I. DESCRIPTION OF THE DURHAM RITUAL MANUSCRIPT.

The Manuscript which contains the collection of offices, etc., commonly known as the Durham Ritual,[1] is preserved in the Library of the Cathedral of Durham, and bears the signature A. iv. 19. The brown leather binding, probably dating from the first half of the nineteenth century, has on the back the title Rituale Dunelmense. A. iv. 19. On the front cover is the inscription Ecclesiæ Dunelm., and the back cover of the volume is adorned with the arms of the see of Durham. The same arms, together with the mark A. iv. 19, are to be seen in the book-plate which is pasted on the inside of the front cover.

The volume, in its present state, numbers eighty-eight leaves of vellum, besides an additional vellum leaf in a transverse position at the end of the book, serving as a kind of fly-leaf or outer cover. There are two paper fly-leaves at the beginning and at the end of the book. The size of the MS. is $9\frac{3}{4}$ by $6\frac{1}{2}$ inches.[2]

Pagination. The pages of the MS. are numbered, rather indistinctly, with lead-pencil. Also the leaves are numbered in the same way. Both numberings refer to the MS. in its present state, after the loss of numerous leaves in different places, and the transposition of some leaves at an early date by a binder.

There are, however, a few interesting traces of an earlier numbering of leaves. In the upper margin of MS. p. 3, appears, in dark-coloured ink, the number 13, and on MS. p. 5, in the same hand and ink, the number 14. This numbering, which probably dates from the sixteenth century, points to a time when the MS. had not yet lost its original first eleven

[1] Often quoted hereafter in the abbreviated form D.R. References are to pages and lines of the present edition, counting the lines of the Latin text, whether glossed or not. The only exception is in the case of the Rubrics, which are numbered separately; only if a rubric is glossed it is counted in the number of the lines of the page. Where, as is often the case in our Introduction, reference is made to a page of the MS., this is always clearly indicated by the use of the expression "MS. p."

[2] Stevenson, in the preface to his edition, speaks of it as "a small folio, measuring $6\frac{1}{2}$ inches in height by $4\frac{1}{2}$ in breadth," a strange blunder difficult to account for.

leaves. But no further trace of this numbering is to be found in the volume.

Numbering of original quires. In several places in the MS. there are, at the bottom of a left-hand page, Roman numerals, no doubt contemporary with the Latin text, indicating the number of the quire ending with that page. Of such numerals are found:

At the bottom of MS.	p.	18,	the	number	II
,,	,,	,,	,,	,,	34,	,,	,,	III
,,	,,	,,	,,	,,	48,	,,	,,	V
,,	,,	,,	,,	,,	88,	,,	,,	VII
,,	,,	,,	,,	,,	106,	,,	,,	VIII

No trace of a numeral can be discovered at the end of quire IX (MS. p. 130). The last leaves of quire IV and quire VI, as well as the whole of the original quire I, are, as will be seen below, lost. At the bottom of MS. p. 34 (end of quire III) there are, in the hand of the writer of the Latin text, the letters o m, perhaps the beginning of a catchword; but the first leaf of the following quire being lost, it is not possible to make out the rest of the word or the passage it refers to.

The MS. has been, at some unascertainable date, submitted, with regard to its composition, to a careful examination by an expert,[1] the results of which are annotated on a number of paper slips inserted in the volume. The principal facts of interest are the following:

The volume is composed of three separate parts, which must, however, have been together and formed one whole from very early times.

Part I, by far the largest of the three parts, originally consisted of nine quires or gatherings, and numbered, when complete, ninety-four leaves. It has, however, suffered considerable mutilations.[2] Quire I

[1] The authorities of the Cathedral Library of Durham have not been able to ascertain by whom this examination was made, but do not think it was done by Stevenson. Skeat gives a short summary of the results of it in his Collation of the Durham Ritual (1879). He refers (p. 55) to Bradshaw in words which may indicate that the examination of the MS. is due to him. But (p. 57) he also speaks of the Dean and Chapter of Durham having granted the use of the MS. to Dr. Murray for a period sufficient for a "full examination of it, especially with a view to ascertain the make-up of the book, and its connexion, if any, with the Durham Gospels, as asserted by Sir F. Madden."

[2] It is not easy to make out when these mutilations took place. If, as seems probable from the character of the numerals, the numbers 13 and 14 mentioned above as appearing on the present MS. pp. 3 and 5, date from the sixteenth century, the beginning of the MS. cannot then have been lost. But

(ten leaves) is entirely lost. Of Quire II (ten leaves) the first leaf is gone. The present beginning of the MS. consequently corresponds to fol. 12 of the original complete volume. This quire comprises our text from the beginning to the end of MS. p. 18 (. . . . . querenti illum.; present edition, p. 20).—Quire III numbered nine leaves (the original third leaf having been cancelled); of these leaves fol. 7 is now lost, leaving a gap of two pages between the present MS. pp. 30 and 31 (see edition, p. 32). The quire ends with MS. p. 34 (. . . . . usque in seculum; edition, p. 36).—Of the original ten leaves of Quire IV the first eight leaves are lost, as is also leaf 10; all that remains of this quire is the original fol. 9, corresponding to the present MS. pp. 35–36 (nihil patiamur, etc., edit., p. 36, to . . . . . gaudeamus . per dominum; edit., p. 38). Quire V had originally ten leaves; of these leaves 1–4 are lost, forming together with the lost leaf at the end of the preceding quire a gap of ten pages between the present MS. pp. 36 and 37 (edit., p. 38). Leaves 5–10 are preserved, the last leaf ending with MS. p. 48 (. . . . . cuius natalitia, edit., p. 51).—Quire VI consisted of eleven leaves (one of them, 6*, being an inserted extra leaf). Leaf 6* and the last leaf of the quire are, however, lost, leaving gaps of two pages each between the present MS. pp. 60 and 61 (edit., p. 64) and after MS. p. 66 (edit., p. 70).—Quire VII numbers eleven leaves (10 and one inserted leaf, 4*), all perfect, corresponding to MS. pp. 67–88 (ending . . . . . semper com . . . , edit., p. 93).—Quire VIII had originally eleven leaves (ten and one inserted leaf, 4*). The first two leaves are lost, leaving a gap of four pages between MS. pp. 88 and 89; the remaining nine leaves correspond to MS. pp. 89–106 (ending . . . . . unus deus cognomine. Amen.; edit., p. 112).—Quire IX consists of twelve leaves, all perfect, corresponding to the present MS. pp. 107–130 (ending . . . . . in sempiterna secula . amen ; edit., p. 138). Part I of our volume has thus lost 10+1+1+8+1+4+1+1+2=29 of its original ninety-four leaves, consisting in its present imperfect state of sixty-five leaves or one hundred and thirty pages (edit., pp. 1–138).

Part II of the volume comprises one quire of seven leaves (one leaf having been cancelled), and four single leaves. These single leaves, which should follow the quire, have been, at an early date, before Wanley examined the MS., displaced by a binder and placed in front of the quire. The true beginning of Part II is MS. p. 139 (edit., p. 145). The seven leaves of the quire correspond to MS. pp. 139–152 (edit., p. 162), the text of p. 152 being continued on the present MS. p. 131 (edit., p. 138), and the four displaced leaves corresponding to the present MS. pp. 131–138. This portion of the volume has suffered no loss of leaves.

all the mutilations now found in the volume were there when the MS. (c. 1700) was examined by Wanley.

Part III of the MS. consists of one quire of twelve leaves, all perfect, corresponding to the present MS. pp. 153–176 (edit., pp. 162–199). To the quire has been attached an outside half-leaf in a transverse position (see above). This leaf has no connection with the MS. as such. It is covered with Latin text (Gospel extracts) in a large hand, and with numerous Latin scribblings, in part impossible to decipher. The only scribbling worth noting are the words on the last page: tres species . ðrie megwlitas. No other trace of Old English can be found on these two pages.

The vellum used in the MS. varies considerably in thickness and quality. In Part III it is mostly very stout and hard. So are three of the four misplaced single leaves in Part II. In Part I the leaves are, upon the whole, thinner and softer, particularly so in the second quire. The colour of the vellum is partly white, partly yellowish. Some leaves have evidently served as writing material for other purposes before they, after erasure or sponging, were employed for the text of the D.R. Such is e.g. the case with MS. p. 167 (the Aldred entries; edit., p. 185). For MS. p. 138, see Notes at the end of the present edition. An erasure of four lines occurs on MS. p. 42, before the rubric "Item collecte unde supra"; an erasure of similar length is found on MS. p. 44 before "Item collectiones." On MS. p. 76 a rubric has been sponged out, and a space corresponding to seven lines has been left blank. Many pages of the MS. are more or less stained. And the upper part of the outer margin of a considerable number, in fact the great majority, of the leaves has suffered sadly from damp and use so as to render the deciphering of many words very hard or even impossible.

The ruling is done on one side of the leaf with a hard point, with double marginal bounding lines. The number of lines to the page varies more or less in all parts of the MS. In Part I, as far as the glossing extends, the average number of lines is 22 to 23. The end of Part I, containing miscellaneous unglossed matter, shows in this respect greater variations. The lists of versicles, etc. on MS. pp. 128–129 are arranged in two or three columns. In Part II the number of lines varies considerably, as is also the case with the size of the handwriting. While the large writing on MS. pp. 139–142 numbers only 21 lines to the page, pp. 144–149 have no less than 32 lines.—In Part III, the poetical texts on MS. pp. 153–154, written (as are all the versified portions in our MS.) as continuous text, are not arranged in columns, but from MS. p. 155 onward the text is written in two columns. Such arrangement prevails to the end of the MS. (including Aldred's entries on p. 167), with an average number of 23 lines to the page, the only exception being MS. p. 168, which is not written in columns.

Initials. The initials in Parts II and III of the MS. are plain and of no special interest, but in Part I there are numerous initials showing an ornamentation of interlaced knots, representing heads of snakes, birds, or other animals, or grotesque human faces. The more elaborate initials are mostly in the dark ink of the Latin text. Besides, there are a great number of initials in red ink, generally simpler in execution. The proportion of black and red initials varies very much in different portions of the MS. In some places grotesque drawings, rather roughly executed in black ink, and representing human heads or hands, or animals such as dogs, birds, fishes, dragons, etc., are found in the margin, generally at the bottom of the page; so e.g. on pp. 1, 7, 18, 30, 63, 86, 89, 94, 113, 117 and 118 of the MS.

The ink used for the Latin text of the MS. is either black, or more or less turning to brown. Only quite exceptionally red ink has been used; so in the few glossed pages of Part II (MS. pp. 139–142), and in the glossed portions of MS. p. 166, printed in the present edition with capital letters.

The rubrics, numerous throughout the MS., vary considerably in character and in colour. In the glossed portion of Part I the immense majority of the rubrics are in red ink. In the last portions of Part I, and in Part II, there is much variety, some rubrics being in red, others in black or in a metallic grey colour, while many rubrics do not differ at all from the bulk of the Latin text; cf. p. 201 of the present edition. In Part III the rubrics are mostly red, but on some pages they are black; they do not, as a rule, differ in character from the main portion of the Latin text.

The mark xb' (the letters x and a crossed b) is found in the upper margin of MS. p. 22; so also, in very small letters, in the left margin of MS. p. 94 (with a b' written over it); and (reproduced in the present edition) in the upper margin of MS. p. 139, the true beginning of Part II. On the use and meaning of this mark (Christe benedic, or Christus benedictus) see Max Förster, Die Beowulf-Handschrift (Leipzig 1919), p. 3.

Scribblings. In some places there are found in the margin of our MS. scribblings of letters (a b c d e f, etc.) in the hand of the writer of the Latin, evidently to test pen or ink; so e.g. MS. pp. 98, 101, 137. There are, besides, some other scribblings, of varying date. Of the date of the MS. itself, or not very far from it, are the scribblings magnus dñs (p. 32), iñc xp̃c (p. 135); in nomine dñe (sic! p. 150, in red ink); bloetsa drihtin (p. 132). Of a much later date are the initials IM (p. 17) and the name Ricardus (p. 155, late mediæval hand). On the Aldhun entry (MS. p. 136) see below.

The Latin text in Part I of our MS. is, from the beginning up to the middle of MS. p. 121, written by the same hand. There are, no doubt, certain minor variations in different portions of this part of the MS. On some pages the writing appears thinner and sharper, on other pages (notably after MS. p. 100) broader and paler. Yet these inequalities are such as can be explained by changes of pen or ink, or they may depend on the comparative smoothness or roughness of the surface of the vellum. Moreover, we must not forget the purely "human element" in a scribe who had to execute a work of considerable length.[1] This handwriting has been, in the text accompanying the two plates from D.R. published by the Palæographical Society, described as using "letters rather rugged, but compact. The characteristics of the tenth century are seen in the growing length of the vertical strokes and in the angularity of certain letters, particularly a, q, and r." For a good specimen of this hand see Plate I (MS. p. 71) in the present edition. Only the unglossed hymn on MS. p. 106 (Auctor salutis unicus) is a later addition in a very different hand, written after the page had been erased, the erasure removing the continuation of the last prayer on MS. p. 105, interrupted in the middle of the word pleni(tudo).

On MS. p. 121 (Deus meus et . . . . . .) a new hand sets in, and in the remaining portion of Part I there are entries by several hands.—In Part II of the MS. several hands of very different character can be distinguished. Of special interest is the only glossed portion of this part, i.e. MS. pp. 139–142, the true beginning of Part II. The handsome, firm, round hand of these pages (written in red ink, the few corrections of the text being also in red) can be studied in Plate II (MS. p. 140) of our edition.

[1] Cf. the Lindisfarne Gospels, with Introduction by Eric George Millar. London 1923, Introd., p. 12.

The Latin text of Part III of the MS., with the exception of a few passages (the unglossed prayers at the bottom of MS. p. 154, the Aldred entries on p. 167, and the whole p. 168), is written all through, including the rubrics, by the same hand, which the experts of the Palæographical Society identify with the hand of the glossator,[1] characterising it in the following manner: "The handwriting of the glosser is far better and more ornamental than the rest. Although the letters are carefully formed and have, at first sight, the appearance of greater age, they prove on examination to be imitative and not consistent." A specimen of this handwriting is given in our Plate III (p. 170 of the MS.).

Somewhat different views have been held with regard to the age of the Latin text, notably the principal and most interesting part of it, i.e. pp. 1–120 of the MS. in its present state. Wanley dated the glossing back to King Alfred's time, the Latin text being then presumably a little older; and his opinion is adopted in the short notice on our MS. found in the Catalogue of the MSS. of the Durham Cathedral Library.[2] Stevenson, in the preface to his edition of the Durham Ritual, holds that the character of the Latin writing "prevents it from claiming a higher antiquity than the commencement of the ninth century." Lingard (in his Note on the D.R. in the second volume of his History of the Anglo-Saxon Church) thinks that "the Collectarium was not written later than the ninth century." Skeat (Collation of the D.R.) holds the view that Part I cannot be earlier than the tenth century. This is also the opinion of Frere (in his introduction to the Leofric Collectar) and, as quoted above, that of the experts of the Palæographical Society who have examined our MS. And, indeed, there do not seem to be any arguments of weight which induce us to assume a higher antiquity than the tenth century for the Latin text of the main portion of our MS.

In any attempt to determine the age and the origin of this portion of the MS. there is one point of great interest which has to be taken into account. The passage written in Old English and having the rubric "halsuncge," on p. 109 of MS. (edit., p. 114), is, as was pointed out already

[1] The identity of the handwriting in this part of the Latin text with that of the glossator was pointed out already by Wanley. In Wanley's opinion the glossator is responsible also for the Latin text of the glossed pages in Part II (our Plate II), a theory which does not seem to have been confirmed by later palæographists, and will necessarily remain very doubtful.

[2] Codicum Manuscriptorum Ecclesiæ Cathedralis Dunelmensis Catalogus Classicus. Descriptus a Thoma Rud. Dunelmiæ 1825.

by Wanley, and as is evident to anyone who examines the MS., in the same handwriting as the Latin text of this portion of D.R. This passage has been printed by Sweet in his Oldest English Texts, p. 175 f., under the title, "Durham Admonition." That the "halsuncge" is written in a southern type of Old English is evident at first sight. It differs from the Anglian dialects, notably from the Northumbrian of the gloss, in the most striking features of phonology and grammar. It is enough to draw attention to the use of the vowel a before nasals (naman, gangen, man); to the breaking of an a before l+consonant (ealle, ealne); to the spelling ciricean; to the preservation of inflectional -n in forms such as naman, hal(i)gan, ciricean, faemnan, gangen; and to the use of the preposition "on" in cases where Anglian no doubt would have used "in." Skeat, and after him Sweet, were inclined to see in this passage a specimen of the Kentish dialect, but it is not easy to find in it any features which are unmistakably Kentish. Nor does the character of the language compel us to date it back to the ninth century, as Sweet thinks probable. There is nothing in it which militates against its being Southern (Saxon) of the (perhaps early) tenth century. This cannot, of course, be adduced as a conclusive proof for the assumption that the writer of the Latin text of MS. pp. 1–120, who is also the writer of the "halsuncge," was himself a Southerner, unless we hold the view that he not only copied the Old English passage, just as he copied the Latin, but actually composed it in his own dialect. But it must be admitted that the appearance of a specimen of good Southern English in our MS. makes it highly probable that this part of the MS. was written in the South of England.[1]

The remaining portion of Part I, and the whole of Part II, are written in several hands, differing more or less in character, and no doubt also in date. It may be noted that on MS. p. 151 (edit., p. 160) a sentence in Old English is rather unexpectedly met with in a purely Latin context. This sentence contains one characteristic Northumbrian form (nioða); and as the Old English words look like an improvisation of the copyist who wrote

[1] On the same page as the "halsuncge," and on the pages immediately following it, are eight rubrics in Old English (printed by Sweet, loc. cit.). These rubrics, which are in part faded and not easy to decipher, are somewhat puzzling from the point of view of dialect. Their language cannot be identified with that of the "halsuncge," but shows curious features of a mixed dialect. The first of the rubrics has some distinctly non-Northumbrian characteristics (fęrlice, sprecan), whereas the rubrics on MS. pp. 111–114 have certain features of a decidedly Northumbrian (or at any rate Anglian) character, such as mon, salt, infalleð, scal(l), netena, reda, ungetionu, ðiofum, and the use of the preposition "in."

the Latin text, we may be allowed to infer that at any rate the portion of Part II written by this hand is of Northern English origin.[1]

As has been pointed out above, Wanley, as well as the experts of the Palæographical Society, identify the Latin handwriting of most of Part III of the MS. with the hand of the glossator. If this identification be accepted, it may be of importance in determining the probable age of this part of the MS., throwing at the same time some light on the composition of the volume as a whole.

The Northumbrian character of the D.R. gloss has never been doubted. The gloss is generally in red ink throughout the MS. Only where a gloss is added to a Latin text written in red, does the glossator use black ink, i.e. in the glossed portion of Part II (MS. pp. 139–142), and in the gloss to five rubrics on MS. p. 166 (edit., pp. 183–184). Skeat (Collation, p. 57) is inclined to see in the black glosses[2] another hand than the one that wrote the red gloss. Wanley, on the other hand, is convinced of the uniformity of the glossing throughout the volume, and such is evidently also the view held by the experts of the Palæographical Society. The difference between this part of the gloss and the main portion of it does not, indeed, strike one as being greater than the small inequalities that can be found within the extensive red gloss itself. The letters are formed in the same way; thus there are, although the proportion varies much in different pages, examples of the open (u-shaped) letter a in every part of the MS. by the side of the common type of the letter. One point in the spelling of the gloss may, however, deserve notice. Whereas in the glossed portion of Part I there are hardly 10 instances of the form ge- by the side of c. 1750 instances of the prefix gi-, the black gloss of MS. pp. 139–142 has about seven times as many cases of ge- as of gi-. That, however, no great importance can be attached to this divergence in spelling becomes evident if we examine the corresponding conditions in the gloss of Part III. Here the MS. pp. 153–159 have almost exclusively the form gi-, but from p. 160 onward the glossator gives a marked preference to the spelling ge-, which in MS. pp. 160–176 appears in no less than four-fifths of all the instances of this common prefix. And yet there can be no question of a change of hand in all this part of the gloss.

[1] The hand that wrote the Old English sentence is certainly responsible for the Latin text from the Missa de Trinitate (MS. p. 149) to the true end of Part II.

[2] At any rate those on MS. pp. 139–142, for he is not sure of the identity of the black writing on these pages and on p. 166.

The personality of the glossator of the Durham Ritual is, and will no doubt always remain, unknown. That Aldred the Provost, whose entry on MS. p. 167 will be discussed below, could be the writer of the gloss, is a supposition that cannot be seriously maintained after comparing his handwriting with the very different hand of the glossator. More deserving of consideration is the theory that our glossator was the same Aldred who glossed the Lindisfarne Gospels, a theory which has had the support of authorities such as Wanley (who saw in Aldred a contemporary of King Alfred) and Sir Frederic Madden (see the quotation in E. G. Millar's footnote to p. 5 of his introduction to the work on the Lindisfarne Gospels). Yet even this theory must be abandoned, as a closer examination and comparison of the two texts by palæographical experts has made evident.[1] No doubt the resemblance is great, just as the dialectal character of the two glosses is closely akin. But there are certain divergences in the writing of some letters. One instance may be mentioned. Throughout the gloss of the D.R. the letter " ð " is written with a separate stroke crossing the shaft. In the Lindisfarne gloss this is the common type in the earlier part of the MS., but soon another type becomes common, where the whole letter is produced with one stroke without raising the pen, and this type is used in Aldred's colophon. And, leaving aside peculiarities of handwriting, there are a sufficient number of minor divergences in spelling, in the use of abbreviations, and in the grammar and the vocabulary of the two glosses of Northern Northumbria to render it highly improbable that they could be the work of the same man. It is not without interest to compare the only glossed Latin passage common to the two texts, the extract from the Gospel of St. Matthew, 22, 2–14, found on pp. 107–108 of our edition of D.R. A very considerable number of Latin words are found to be differently glossed; the most important being the following: nuptiae, D.R. gimvngo, Li. færmo or brydlopa; servos, D.R. esnas, Li. ðegnas; prandium, D.R. giriord, Li. symbel ł swoese; contumelia(s), D.R. sceomo, Li. fræceðo; affectos, D.R. gifrēmedo, Li. geyfled ł getéled; perdidit, D.R. gispilde, Li. fordyde ł losade; homicidas, D.R. monslago, Li. morðorslago; discumbentium, D.R. lingendra, Li. sittendra ł restendra; non vestitum, D.R. vngigearvad, Li. unweded ł unscirped; vestem nuptialem, D.R. giwoedo gimvngelic, Li. wede brydes ł brydreaf; ministris, D.R. embihtvm', Li. ðegnum.

[1] See Skeat, Collation, p. 55, and footnote giving the opinions of Sir James Murray and Sir E. Maunde Thompson; and the description, often quoted above, in the Publications of the Palæographical Society.

The gloss of the D.R. is generally held to date from the close of the tenth century.[1] But the expression "close of the century" should perhaps not be interpreted too strictly. In any case there is little doubt that the glossing falls within the second half of the tenth century.

Uncertain as is the exact date of the gloss, there is one passage in our MS. in which the writer has been careful to give his readers minute information as to the time of writing. We refer to the well-known entry by Aldred the Provost (MS. p. 167, edit. p. 185), which seems to have been written on the 10th of August, 970.[2] This entry has given rise to much speculation. Skeat, loc. cit., p. 54, makes the conjecture that Aelfsige, the bishop whom Aldred accompanied to Wessex, may "have acquired this Wessex (or Kentish) Service-book on this very occasion; and that Aldred, by way of neatly commemorating the circumstance, wrote out four prayers with special reference to St. Cuthbert." Yet Aldred's entry is written on a page of Part III of the MS., which, according to Skeat (p. 55) is probably of Northern origin, and can hardly have been acquired in the South of England. If the writer of the Latin text of Part III is really our glossator (see above), its Northumbrian origin is, of course, certain. It seems just as probable that Aldred had in his tent during his visit to Wessex the whole of the composite MS. of the D.R. In no case can Aldred's entry have been made on a detached leaf, later inserted in the MS., as the examination of the volume shows that Part III consists of one quire of 12 leaves. But supposing the volume was complete in 970, including the Latin text written by the glossator, an interesting question arises. Was the volume, on its visit to the South of England, already glossed, or was the glossing made later, after the return of the MS. to Northumbria? This question cannot, of course, be answered with the information at our disposal. The glossator, who was evidently a skilled scribe, may have written the Latin text of Part III at an earlier date and been employed in glossing the volume at a later period. But there is also the other possibility that the whole of his task, the writing of the Latin as well as the glossing, may have been accomplished before the summer 970. Whether the glossator worked out his gloss independently, or had some earlier work to rely on, is a question impossible to decide. If such a work ever existed, there is no trace left of its existence. The gloss may have been written at Chester-le-Street, before the episcopal see was transferred to Durham.

A somewhat later entry is probably the one referring to Aldhun, on MS. p. 136 (edit., p. 143).[1] As Aldhun is here named "antistes," i.e. bishop, the entry cannot have been written earlier than the year 990. The MS. was then either at Chester-le-Street or at Durham, to which place the see was transferred in 995, and it seems to have remained ever since in the possession of the Cathedral of Durham.

II. NOTE ON CERTAIN PECULIARITIES IN THE SPELLING OF THE LATIN TEXT IN THE DURHAM RITUAL.

The orthography of the Latin text of the Durham Ritual offers certain points of interest. In his paper on Irish-Latin influence in Cynewulfian Texts (Eng. Stud. 40, p. 1 ff.), Professor Carleton F. Brown draws attention to the spelling assia in D.R., p. 196, 4 (in Part III of the MS.), contrasting it with the spelling asia 44, 1 (in Part I). The spelling assia, he says, suggests the influence of Irish orthography in Part III of the MS. of D.R., other instances of such influence being e.g. effesso 196, 4; channaneus 197, 1; æcclessiæ 193, 19, in which last word not only the ss, but also the initial æ reminds of Irish-Latin influence. He refers to Zeuss (-Ebel), Grammatica celtica, Praefatio p. 16, where certain orthographical characteristics of Irish-Latin MSS. are summarised.

An examination of the Latin text of D.R. makes it evident that the principal peculiarities of spelling pointed out by Zeuss are met with in our MS. The chief points of interest will be illustrated in the following by a sufficient number of characteristic examples.

1. Confusion of s and ss. Instances of such confusion are very frequent. We find in our MS., e.g.:

(a) ss for s : septuagessima 6, Rubr. 2; quadragessima 9, Rubr.; euassimus 33, 18; quessumus 57, 1. 160, 27; issaac 130, 3; issac 155, 21; ussum 130, 24; effussa 146, 11; refussus 163, 17; inlessa 146, 11; inlessos 172, 2. 179, 15; admissimus 149, 10; quessiui 176, 11; pressit (=præsit) 193, 8; cessares 193, 13; effesso 196, 4; assia 196, 4. The spelling eclessia (æclessia, etc.) is met with 129, 15. 142, 22. 153, 8. 193, 19.

[1] Cf. on this entry Lingard, Vol. II, p. 364, where it is pointed out that the words salvet, honoret, amet are borrowed from Alcuin's dedication of his treatise on the Trinity to the Emperor Charlemagne.

(b) s for ss: percusoque 58, 4; confesio 91, 7; misam 105, Rubr.; remisionis (-onem) 135, 17. 157, 7; remisæ 183, 2; asistitur 152, 6; abysos 181, 15.

2. Other cases of confusion of double and single consonants:

(a) double for single consonant: occuli (-orum, -is) 4, 4. 88, 10. 115, 13; peccunia 190, 3; effesso 196, 4; calligas 58, 6; contullit 54, 9; immittemur (=imitemur) 62, 12; commam 96, 2; assummere 101, 7; summentes 160, 26; ammator 104, 16; channaneus 197, 1; sarra 109, 19. 111, 6; turribulum 70, 15; arrescunt 125, 18; tyrrannum 138, 7.

(b) single for double consonant: ocultum (-orum) 41, 12. 114, 3; ocurere 106, 5; pecauimus 135, 18; pecata (-orum, -is) 149, 5. 10. 153, 3. 154, 13. 157, 8; efectum 68, 2; sufragia 156, 9; iminentibus 53, 2; sumus (-i, =summus) 34, 21. 105, 19; cumunem 131, 1; comemoratione 154, 12; cumanibus (=cum manibus) 20, 12; apellatur 43, 19; suplices 122, 9; supliciter 150, 1. 153, 7; suplicantium 160, 13; suplicationibus 154, 17. 155, 7. 156, 11. 157, 8; curamus 27, 14; teris (=terris) 126, 18; surexisti 138, 14; resurexionem 130, 9; mite (-ere) 65, 9. 148, 6. In the word ecclesia spellings with single c, and, about twice as often, with cc, occur throughout the MS.

3. Confusion of b and p, d and t: optinere 4, 19. 14, 5. 82, 7; pleps 59, 17. 70, 4. 79, 14; puplicam 191, 12; obtimum 28, 4; obtatam 110, 6; babtistæ (-ismum) 152, 11. 198, 3.—inquid 106, 15.

4. h is missing, or superfluously added: ortamur (-amenta) 11, 12. 56, 2; ostem 105, 8; orror 162, 19.—adhulescentulos 111, 5; habundantia 105, 6. 124, 18; habundans 130, 19; husui 117, 7; habiit, -iens 142, 6. 143, 7. 10; hostiam (for ostium) 174, 8. 179, 5. 182, 8; hostiarius 193, 20; nihilhominus 190, 2.

5. Some further curiosities in the spelling of consonants are: aferte (=averte) 42, 17; fafum (=favum) 130, 9; sicientem 1, 12; benefitio 117, 3; defentio 87, 18. 105, 5; aspertione 122, 2.

6. There are also several irregularities in the spelling of some vowels. Rather frequent is the confusion of ae, æ, ę and e. Leaving aside the prefix præ-, pre- (mostly abbreviated), quæsumus-quesumus (also in the great majority of cases abbreviated)[1]; cælum (celum), æternus (eternus), sæculum (seculum), ædificare (edificare), and the very common use of -e for the ending -æ, the following characteristic instances may be noted:

[1] The spelling with e prevailing where these words are written in full, the abbreviated forms have in our edition been expanded to pre-, quesumus.

fæcit, 40, 15; aedaces 64, 7; cotidiæ 74, 9. 75, 4; lænitas (laen-) 78, 17. 105, 1. 111, 13; cælebramus 75, 4; æffectum 105, 15; aefficiaris 113, 23; auxiliætur[1] 128, 9; sociætate 158, 7; ræplet 169, 18; æpiscopo 176, 1; equalem 21, 10; euum 112, 15; cessares 193, 13. The spelling æc(c)lesia (or aec-, rarely ęc-) appears c. 20 times, the great majority of the instances occurring in Part I of the MS. Note also æcclæsiam 59, 9 and aeclęsia 18, 11. The spelling mærtyr (męrtyr) for martyr occurs c. 10 times[2] in the MS. (cf. Irish mairtir, Welsh merthyr).—Note finally the following curiosities with regard to vowels: gaudiat 8, 6; muneantur 88, 1; sterelitas 118, 1. 120, 14; meredianos 129, 23; dulcidine (-em) 129, 26. 130, 9; ylimento (=elemento) 121, 14; diabulum 112, 4; cumunem 131, 1; commoniter 155, Rubr. 4; agusti 187, 12. A peculiar spelling is uolunneratus (=vulneratus) 136, 13.

Spellings of the type described by Zeuss are, as appears from the preceding examination, by no means rare in the D.R. They are not confined to one part of the MS., but distributed over the three portions of which it is composed.

III. SOME REMARKS ON THE GENERAL CHARACTER OF THE GLOSSING IN THE DURHAM RITUAL.

The glossator of the Durham Ritual was not a very skilled Latinist. As will be pointed out below in our remarks on the vocabulary, many Latin words have been misunderstood or inadequately rendered in the gloss. The glossator, moreover, had many a hard struggle with the grammatical forms and constructions of his Latin text, which, it must be admitted, contains a great number of intricate and difficult passages. It is no more than natural that the glossator was at a loss when the Latin text itself is corrupt; and the list of corrupt passages is a formidable one, as can be seen in the Notes at the end of the present edition. But even where the Latin text is faultless, the gloss abounds in careless renderings and mistakes of a grammatical character, some of them easy to explain from the nature of the Latin construction, others simply the result of ignorance or carelessness on the part of the glossator.

As a detailed discussion of this aspect of the glossator's work would demand much more space than can reasonably be devoted to it, only the general features of his method of glossing will be pointed out and illustrated with some characteristic quotations.

The state of nominal and pronominal inflection in the documents of late Old Northumbrian, especially of the Northern variety, makes it, in numerous instances, very difficult, or even impossible, to fix the case, number, or gender, which the glossator has intended to express. Some very striking examples are offered by the forms of the possessive user. The glossator seems to have had a marked predilection for the form vserne; see e.g. pater noster, fæder vserne 172, 9. 175, 5. 180, 15; deus noster, god vserne 37, 17. 45, 18. 84, 19; saluator noster, hælend vserne 33, 5; ad deum nostrum, to gode vserne 10, 18; etc. Other instances of careless or curious forms of possessive pronouns are e.g. memoria mea (nom. sing.), gimynd mino 3, 17; famulos tuos, ðegnas ðin$\bar{v}$ 33, 12; deum tuum, gode ðinne 55, 20; ad tua beneficia, to ðinra velfremnisso 83, 12; etc. A misreading of quorum as tuorum is probable in the gloss ðinra 84, 2. In some cases the Latin genitive of the personal pronoun has been rendered as if it were a possessive; so e.g. tui, ðines 19, 5. 20, 21. In the glossing non estis uestri, naro gie iveres 107, 3, the Latin form has been translated as if a genit. sing.; cf. also flores mei, blostmo mines 3, 11. The Latin suorum, suarum, referring to a singular noun, is sometimes carelessly glossed with a plural: hiora 9, 19. 32, 8. 64, 6.—A few more examples will serve to illustrate the glossator's difficulty in finding a grammatically correct gloss to Latin pronominal forms. In some cases Latin nos is hesitatingly rendered with double glosses, e.g. vs' ł ve 4, 19. Latin ipse is glossed "he" 90, 3. 170, 16, although referring to the second person (ipse adiuua, respice). The glossator is often at a loss how to render the Latin relative pronoun. So e.g. qui referring to a second person singular (correctly ðv ðe 2, 2, etc.) is glossed ða ðe ł ðv ðe 43, 6; ða ðc 50, 16. 101, 16. Nom. plur. qui is glossed se ðe—ða ðe 25, 18. 19; acc. plur. neutr. quę, ðio ł ða ðe 8, 19; etc. See also the glossing of gustantesquę (the quę no doubt was puzzling) with birgende ða ðe 99, 5.

The gender of nouns in D.R. is very uncertain. It is hardly necessary to enter into details, yet a few striking examples may be quoted. Such are e.g. populum tuum ..... securum, folc ðin ..... sorgleasne 40, 8; uitam sempiternam ..... presentem, lif ece ..... ondveardne 48, 15. Sometimes the glossator shows his hesitation by using double glosses, e.g. hereditati tuæ, erfevardnisse ðin$\bar{v}$ ł ðinræ 173, 11.

In some cases the gender of the Latin adjective may have been mechanically rendered, as e.g. hanc domum, ðas hvs 123, 1. Curious are some instances where the noun is a common feminine proper name; e.g. beate agnetis martyris tuæ cuius, eadges agnes ðrovres ðines ðaere 50, 10; etc.

Very often there is more or less confusion in the rendering of case forms of the Latin text. A Latin ablat. sing. seems translated as a nom. sing., e.g. imple mundum gloria tua, fyll middangeard wvldor ðin 2, 15. Conversely, a nom. sing. is glossed as if an ablat. sing., e.g. sola misericordia, anv̄ miltheartnise 125, 1. But frequently it is not easy to find any reason for the impossible form used in the gloss; see e.g. in tenebras exteriores, in ðiostrvm ða vtmesto 101, 9; in omne opus bonum, in ælcv̄ woerc god 13, 9; dominum nostrum iesum christum filium tuum, driht' vserne hælend criste bearne ðinv̄ 179, 20; etc. Sometimes an uninflected O.E. word (" crude form," or omitted curl ?) glosses very characteristic Latin case forms, e.g. delictorum, synn 18, 5; futurorum bonorum, towardra god 21, 3.

The greatest difficulties, however, are experienced by the glossator in rendering Latin verbal forms and constructions. Taking into account the rich accidence of the Latin verb, the abundant use of participial constructions, etc., even a better Latinist and grammarian than our glossator would have found it a hard task adequately to render the Latin text in an interlinear version, slavishly following the order of words of the original. The Latin deponent verbs are glossed with the greatest inconsistency. By the side of passi sunt, giðrovadon 86, 10, we have passus est, giðrowad is 26, 2. So also orietur, ariseð 5, 12; oriatur, sie arisen 2, 19; confitebitur, giondetað 85, 6; fateatur, giondeted bið 48, 8. See further the glossings of dignari 38, 14. 101, 1; laetari 67, 6. 72, 6; gloriari 79, 15. 82, 10; uenerari 4, 10. 124, 17; etc. Latin passive forms are often correctly rendered, but sometimes they seem to offer the glossator insoluble problems; cf. placaris, gicvoemes ł gicvoemed bist 8, 17; adsistitur, gistondes 71, 7, and many more instances.

The Latin infinitive constructions are glossed in various ways. Very often the glossator has recourse to a dependent clause, with—or sometimes without—a "þte." A few examples will illustrate this method of glossing: reformari mereamur, þte we se eft nivado ve giearnigo 2, 11; mihi absit gloriari, me sie fearr þ ic wvldrige 22, 11; non sinas lacerari, ne f'let ðv þte ve sie tosliteno 36, 1; quos fecisti regenerari, ða dydest þte eft were ł sie acennedo 33, 5. By the side of these and many other examples, in which the Latin expression is well rendered, there are numerous instances of a confused and hardly intelligible translation; e.g. estimabat se uisum uidere, gitelede hine gisihðe gisege 58, 8; nos saluari posse, vsig þte ve sie gihæledo mægi 61, 1: migrasse cognouimus, foerde ve ongeton 66, 19; refert regem excogitasse, sægeð ðone cynig geðohte 194, 4. Parallel glosses sometimes speak of the glossator's hesitation; e.g. nos participes esse uoluisti, ve ł vsig dælnīmende þte ve were waldest 35, 18.

The Latin gerund and gerundive necessarily offer the writer of an O.E. interlinear version no small difficulties. In some cases our glossator uses a noun, often preceded by a preposition, e.g. abstinendo mið f'hæftnise 14, 6; uiuendo, mið life 30, 9; ligandi atque soluendi pontificium, gibvndennises ⁊ æc vndoenise' biscophad 59, 6; etc. A Latin ad+gerund is, of course, conveniently rendered by to+inflected infinitive; e.g. ad ignoscendum, to f'geafanne 10, 18. When the Latin gerund has an object, or the corresponding gerundival construction is used, the glossator attempts different solutions of the difficulty, hardly one of which is satisfactory from the point of view of O.E. syntax. Sometimes an O.E. nomen actionis is combined with an objective case, e.g. ad protegendum nos, to scildnise' vsig 8, 2; nostris in nouandis cordibus, vsvm in niwvngvm heartvm 2, 19; ortamenta sectando, gitrymniso fylgincgo 56, 3; se offerendo, hine mið gefe ł 90, 20. Often the glossator has recourse to the O.E. present participle, e.g. supplicandi affectum, boensendes gifremmnise 41, 6; agenda sunt, doendo aron 15, 5; animis curandis, ðohtv̄ gemendv̄ 9, 15. An interesting double glossing is non operando iustitiam, no wyrcende ł wyrcing soðfæstnise 43, 15. Other expedients tried by the glossator are e.g. ad beneficia recolenda, to welgidoeno eft bigengo ł 23, 5; ad tua beneficia promerenda, to ðinra velfremnisso foreearnado 83, 13, and to ðinv̄ uoelfremnis' giearnado 73, 2. No "gerundial" character in the sense of modern English grammar ("his writing the letter") can possibly be ascribed to forms in -ing, -vng in D.R., as common nouns appear with exactly the same construction in the experiments of our glossator.

A few words must be devoted to the glossator's endeavours to render the Latin ablative absolute. Sometimes the glossing is very mechanical, e.g. te operante, ðec wyrcende 16, 11; te adiuuante, ðec helpende ðec (sic! second ðec written above the ending -te) 31, 18. In some cases we have an O.E. dative absolute, e.g. collatis clauibus, gilædedv̄ cægvm 59, 5; positis genibus, gisettedvm cnev̄ 44, 7; occasionally with an O.E. present participle for the Latin past participle, as in percepta uenia, ðerhondfoendv̄ f'gefnise 42, 2. Sometimes a prepositional construction is used in the gloss, e.g. abiecta cecitate, mið afirredv̄ blendnise 38, 5; deuicta morte, mið f'cv̄menv̄ deaðe 29, 17; dispectis ignibus, mið giteldvm fyrvm 64, 12. In some instances a clause renders the Latin construction, occasionally in a fairly adequate way, e.g. percusoque latere petri, ⁊ mið ðy gislog side petres 58, 4; yet often with some confusion, e.g. christo passo, criste mið ðy giðrowade 21, 18. A curious experiment is the glossing sacro nos purificante ieiunio, halgv̄ vsig giclænsvnge fæstinv̄ 16, 18.

The Latin present participle is, of course, mostly glossed with the corresponding O.E. form. Interesting is a curious device sometimes used in rendering the Latin future participle; e.g. missurus, bið sendend 100, 17; iudicaturus aduenial, doemend bið tocyme 35, 5 (immediately preceded by iudicandus aduenit, doemend tocvom). Frequent mistakes are found in the glossing of Latin past participles. Often the gloss has a present participle, e.g. inchoata, ða onginnendo 8, 21 (but agvnneno 9, 9); factus, wyrcend 29, 4; consolatos, gifroefrendo 40, 16; etc. For some other peculiarities in the rendering of Latin past participles see 58, 10. 82, 16. 102, 21; etc.

Very often a Latin indicative is glossed with an O.E. subjunctive. To some extent such renderings may depend on the glossator's ignorance of the grammatical character of Latin forms in -at, -et, etc., yet in many cases the Latin form must have been clear even to a poor Latinist. A few examples will illustrate this peculiarity of the gloss: abstinet, bihalde 6, 1; congaudet, gifeaia 97, 6; refulget, eft giscine 86, 5; castigat, gibega 14, 17; meremur, ve giearnia 8, 19; faciet, gidoe 45, 11. 60, 16; uiuit et laudabit, lifia ⁊ gihergia 166, 17. Conversely, a Latin subjunctive is occasionally glossed with an O.E. indicative, e.g. sint, aron 23, 10. 97, 15; permittas, ðv giletas 59, 3; remittantur, biðon f'gefeno 11, 9. A Latin future is generally rendered with an O.E. present, but in some cases mistakes occur, or the glossator hesitates, often because he cannot distinguish between Latin forms in -bit and -uit; e.g. cogitabit, giðohte ł giðenceð 46, 3; potabit, gidrencde 84, 17; proderunt, giðvngon 18, 14; etc. A Latin future perfect glossed with an O.E. present occurs sometimes; e.g. peccauerit, gisynngað 10, 8; fecerit, gidoeð 10, 12.

Certain instances deserve attention, where the glossator makes use of O.E. periphrastic tense forms (to be+present participle). If the Latin text has a compound form, the gloss may simply aim at rendering the two Latin words with two words in English. So e.g. auxiliatus sum, helpend am 19, 5. 20, 20; operatus est, wyrcend væs 10, 12; persecutus sum, gioehtende am 60, 4; confessi sunt, ondetendo aron 48, 6. Where the Latin has a simple form, it is noteworthy that the periphrastic forms in the gloss are principally used with Latin deponent verbs, and more particularly with futures of such verbs; e.g. miserebitur, milsend bið 10, 17; morabitur, bið wnigende 46, 2; deprecabitur, boensande bið 85, 2; meditabitur, bið smeande 46, 3; loquebar, ic biom sprecend 176, 9. So also with some Latin passive forms, and here, too, very often with futures; e.g. exaltabitur, wynsv̄mende bið 1, 14; confundetur, bið sceomiende 79, 7. See also above the curious glossing of some Latin participles in -urus.

Finally there are to be noted frequent examples of a careless use of a noun for an adjective, or an adjective for a noun; see e.g. 17, 8. 25, 7. 63, 15. 195, 2; sometimes also other cases of confusion between classes of words are found, e.g. 6, 5. 100, 16. Anacolutha and misunderstandings of Latin constructions, in addition to those specified above, are by no means infrequent. Characteristic instances are found e.g. 13, 1. 2. 15, 16. 98, 7; etc.

IV. NOTES ON THE VOCABULARY OF THE DURHAM RITUAL GLOSS.

The vocabulary of the Old Northumbrian glosses in the Durham Ritual has received a full treatment in my Wörterbuch zur Interlinearglosse des Rituale Ecclesiae Dunelmensis (Bonn, 1901), which, notwithstanding the great number of new and corrected readings in the present edition, will still in the main keep its value. The Dictionaries of Bosworth-Toller, notably Toller's Supplement, and of Hall (2nd edition) offer many interesting suggestions with regard to difficult words in the Ritual gloss. The following remarks will be limited to some questions of a more general character, and to a short discussion of a number of glosses which appear to be in need of further elucidation.

1. Double glosses to a Latin word.

The glossator of D.R. gives in c. 130 instances parallel glosses, almost without exception joined by a ł (=vel) to a word of the Latin text. In two instances three glosses are given (40, 3. indulta ; 114, 5. uirtutes). As a rule these parallel glosses do not call for any special remark, the glossator simply using synonyms to convey the meaning of the Latin expression (1, 1. laudem ; 3, 1. saluatoris, etc.). In many instances where double glosses occur the Latin word must have offered the glossator some difficulty, either in itself, or on account of the context in which it stands; see e.g. 4, 1. gena ; 5, 5. prestabilis ; 25, 10. azymis, where the incorrect gloss dærstv̄ is first given and the correct gloss ðearfv̄ added after a "ł"; 36, 3. plateis ; 42, 17. reatum ; 47, 1. conpetentis ; 48, 14. sinceram ; 60, 8. agone ; 90, 11. inhereant, etc. Note the evident hesitation in rendering the words effectus and affectus, which are curiously mixed up in the Latin text (18, 14, etc.).—In some instances, generally observed in the Notes at the end of the present edition, the glossator in his first gloss betrays an evident misreading or misunderstanding of the Latin word, but then sees his mistake and, instead of deleting the first gloss, adds another with a "ł" See, in addition to 25, 10. mentioned above, e.g. 4, 10. assequi ; 89, 12. precipue ; 96, 14. deposuimus. The glossator's grammar, i.e. his rendering of Latin grammatical forms and his appreciation of the syntactical possibilities of his own idiom, is (as illustrated in another part of this introduction) generally very negligent. All the more striking therefore is the great number of double glosses of a purely formal or grammatical character, such as parallel forms of pronouns, prepositions, or verbal moods or tenses; see e.g. 4, 19. nos ; 8, 17. placaris ; 8, 19. quę ; 14, 13. mentes ; 20, 21. suscitares ; 21, 9. esset ; 43, 6. qui ; 46, 3. cogitabit ; 53, 8. apud te ; 61, 12. narrabunt ; 70, 12. cum ; 97, 4. esse ; 101, 15. qui ; 102, 2. in hoc ; 111, 11. hunc ; 122, 11. fuerit ; 164, 6. qui ; 173, 11. tuæ ; 175, 19. nostro, etc. We cannot, however, enter into an analysis of all the instances of double glossing, but must refer the reader to the text.

More attention must be devoted to the numerous instances, no less than c. 170, where the glossator has written only one gloss, but has added to it a "ł" (vel), without giving the expected parallel glossing. He may have thought of a later revision of his work, perhaps with the aid of some assistant or some work of reference, which revision, however, never took place. Or he may simply have felt some doubt as to the correctness or adequacy of his translation, without being able to find a better expression. In some cases the glossator's hesitation clearly refers only to grammatical or formal matters; see e.g. 8, 15. ei ; 40, 11. nostram ; 45, 12. illam ; 98, 17. esse ; and probably also instances like 8, 17. offenderis ; 84, 18.

continebit ; 151, 10. detinebantur, and perhaps a few more cases. But in the majority of instances the glossator's thought of a parallel gloss seems to indicate hesitation or doubt as to the appropriate meaning of the gloss he has written down. Sometimes his hesitation appears to be somewhat out of place, as the word used is a good O.E. word, well suited to convey the sense of the Latin expression. But very often we can well understand the glossator's perplexity, for among the glosses to which a " ł " has been added we find a long list of difficult glossings which have puzzled students of the Ritual. Reserving most of these instances for a special discussion below, we confine ourselves here to pointing out glossings such as those to 2, 13. substantia ; 4, 7. fassciculus ; 4, 12. supplices ; 15, 5. inlustra and 29, 3. inlustras ; 17, 1. uegetationem ; 18, 9. affectibus ; 35, 19. effectu ; 38, 6. inlabere ; 39, 16. qualitate ; 56, 10. contristant ; 68, 16. terebintus ; 81, 12. rore ; 85, 19. exipiat ; 91, 1. penetrauit ; 92, 5. diadema ; 103, 16. inspirante ; 120, 17. uersutia ; 122, 7. rugientis ; 174, 17. hodiernos ; 187, 9. actionem ; 190, 9. proconsul ; 193, 1. consul.

A " ł " added to a gloss is in a certain sense a warning addressed to the lexicographer. Yet, on the other hand, some of the worst blunders our glossator has made do not seem to have caused him the least doubt or hesitation.

2. Artificial compounds.

As is the case with many interlinear versions, especially such as do not testify to a sound knowledge of Latin, there appear in the Durham Ritual numerous compound words, chiefly verbs, which cannot be counted as forming part of the natural vocabulary of the glossator, but are merely artificial or mechanical imitations of Latin compounds. Not a few of these artificial glossings indicate, moreover, that the glossator has not understood, or has misunderstood, the peculiar meaning of the Latin word.

A limited selection of examples will elucidate this frequent phenomenon.

There are numerous verbs in D.R. with the prefix ðerh, rendering Latin compounds with per. Some of these verbs are, of course, good O.E. words, found also in literary texts, as e.g. ðerhsla, ðerhwunia. Of some other verbs with this prefix there are, at any rate, one or more examples met with also outside the late Northumbrian interlinear glosses, e.g. ðerhbrvca (perfrui ; 63, 8. etc.); ðerhendia (perpetrare, perficere ; 4, 16.

etc.); ðerhiorna (percurrere ; 8, 13); ðerhstonda (persistere ; 59, 11). Of the verb ðerhfoa (W.S. ðurhfon) one example is found in Beowulf (v. 1504) in the sense of " penetrate "; but the cases in D.R., where ðerh(ond)-foa glosses Latin percipere (15, 16. 32, 13. 35, 19. etc.) are no doubt mechanical renderings of the Latin compound, and ðerhfoe hia (perficiant) 90, 12, probably depends on a misreading of perficiant as percipiant. Some compounds with ðerh- are met with also in Lindisf. (sometimes also in Rushw.[2]); so ðerhcuma (pervenire), ðerhdoa (peragere), ðerhgiendia (perficere), ðerhlæda (perducere). But there remain several compounds which do not seem to occur in other texts, e.g. ðerhgibyria (pertinere) 38, 22; ðerhdæla (perfundere) 110, 18; ðerhgihrina (pertingere) 53, 13; ðerhsenda (permittere) 111, 10. 146, 1, and a few more verbs.

Among compounds with u n d e r there are in D.R., by the side of common O.E. words (undergaa, underðioda, etc.), several mechanical renderings of Latin words with the prefix sub-, some of which are occasionally found also in the Northumbrian Gospels. So e.g. undercyma (succedere, subvenire) 17, 9. 37, 18. 66, 18; underfylga (subsequi) 50, 12; underiorna (succurrere) 43, 10; underondfoend (susceptor) 193, 6; etc.

Very common are compounds in which t o seems to render mechanically a Latin ad. Some characteristic examples are: tobihalda (adtendere) 55, 13; togifylga (adsequi, obtain) 91, 17; toginioma (adtollere) 61, 5; togisoeca (adsequi) 77, 11; cf. also tosocnvng 81, 7 and tosoecnisse 28, 18 (adquisitio); tostonda (adsistere) 109, 3; etc.

Note further compounds with i n, Latin in, such as inbiorna (inardescere) 95, 14; inbyrne (incendium) 64, 6; (gi)inbya (inhabitare) 6, 8. 65, 8; instonda (instare) 165, 4. Mechanical seem also words like in- or onblawa (inspirare) 33, 9. 103, 16; eft blawa (respirare) 41, 16; toblawa (adspirare) 29, 18—at any rate when used in a figurative sense. Characteristic formations are also ofgefehta (expugnare) 147, 2; ofertocuma (supervenire) 182, 16.

Freer combinations, in which the adverb is often separated from the main word by pronominal forms, are those with e f t, rendering Latin re-, and with e f n e , glossing Latin con-; e.g. eft boeta (reparare, restaurare) 35, 7. 72, 11; eft (gi)brenga (referre) 36, 20. 92, 2; eft giceiga (revocare) 38, 6; efne esne (conservus) 70, 22; etc.—Latin inter seems literally rendered in cases like bitvien vosa 66, 3 and bitwih vossa 93, 13 (interesse); bitvihblinnisse 12, 3 and bitvinforletnise 58, 2 (intermissio).—A curious glossing of Latin pro-, no doubt far from idiomatic, and known also from the Lindisfarne glosses, is s o ð, as in soðcliopia (provocare) 42, 8; soðcuma (procedere) 2, 19. 12, 13. 57, 3; soðfylga (prosequi) 29, 18; soðlæda (producere) 108, 17.

The above may suffice to illustrate this common type of word-formation in the gloss of the Durham Ritual.

3. Glosses depending on a misreading or misunderstanding of the Latin text.

Such glosses are numerous in D.R. Some cases are pointed out in the Notes at the end of the present edition (see Notes to 4, 10. 66, 14. 77, 8. 87, 6. 89, 12. 95, 4. 98, 1. 109, 17. 124, 2. 169, 8). The principal instances follow, in alphabetical order (compounds placed according to initial letter of main part of the word. L=Latin; G.=glossator).

æ f e s t, see nið.

æ l m i s s v̄ (elemosinariis) 125, 5. Glossed as if elemosinis.

æ t t' n o (uires) 125, 19. Mistaken for a form of uirus, the context counting for the blunder.

g i b e a r s c i o p o (continua) 31, 1. Probably misread as convivia (Wb., B.T. Suppl.).

v e b i d' (ł voe ofscyvfon, deposuimus) 96, 14. First gloss seems to render the common deprecamur.

b i d d e n d e s ł g i g i v e n d e s (competentis) 47, 1. G. has probably not understood the peculiar sense of c o n p e t e n s, and simply thought of petere.

b l o s t m e ł (rore) 81, 12. G. seems to have thought of flore. Note the ł.

f' e b o d e r e ł (preconium) 48, 5. G. has hesitatingly used the personal expression.

g i b o e t a d o ł (iterata) 62, 5; so also giboetadvm 67, 4. Some misunderstanding of the L. word is probable. Cf. 6, 16. 23, 5. 35, 7. 72, 11.

b r æ d i n g e s (stratus) 181, 4. G. may have translated the genitive stratus (Ps. 131, 3, Psalt. Rom.; Psalt. Gallic. has strati) in its abstract sense of "spreading," not in the sense of "bedding, bed."

g i b y r e d l i c e s (oportunitatis) 12, 14. Perhaps for -licnisses, or the adjective has been carelessly used for the noun.

b y r s t e n d e ł (fiondes byrstende ł, inimici rugientis) 122, 7. Not recorded in B.T. and Hall. Sweet gives "byrstan, roar, lN.," evidently referring to our example. There seems to be some misunderstanding of the L. word. G. may have imagined some connection between rugientis and ruga, -are, -osus (bristling, rough).

ymbcerro ł (uersutia) 120, 17. G. seems to have thought of vertere, conversio.

giclænsia (ðv giclænsia smyltlicvm, seneris! for serenis, correctly rendered by the second gloss) 98, 4. First gloss looks like a guesswork of G., founded on the context.

gicostia (inn bið gicosted, innititur 17, 4; bið gicostad, nititur, 14, 6). Elsewhere in D.R. (gi)costia glosses (com)probare, tentare, tribulare. A misunderstanding of the L. word and form (understood as a passive) seems probable.

eavisclica (monstra) 78, 15. L. text of the passage corrupt (see Note). G. may have thought of (de)monstrare; cf. eavislice (manifestum) 114, 1.

ece (semitarum) 56, 13. Repetition of the gloss ece (sempiterne) of the preceding line.

ece (dæg. hodierna) 2, 18. So also ecelic (dæg, hodierna die) 4, 13. 29, 16. 48, 5; and cf. 34, 1. 57, 2. 126, 2. Finally dedo vsra ecelica ł (actus nostros hodiernos) 174, 17. It is difficult to explain this glossing otherwise than by assuming that G. has confounded the common hodiernus with aeternus.

ecelices 61, 17; ecelices' 96, 8 (aeternitatis). Very free rendering, as there can hardly have existed a noun "ecelic." A noun "ecelicnisse," for which our glosses might possibly stand, is not elsewhere recorded.

elnvnges (zelotes) 192, 4. L. word abbreviated and not easy to decipher. G. seems to have taken it for a genitive case of the preceding word zelus (gl. elnvng).

endebredlices' (synnes, originalis peccati) 109, 13. G. has been led astray by giendebredado (ordinata) of preceding line. See correct glossing 101, 10.

eð (ondfengelic, acceptabile) 11, 15. G. seems to have meant to write eð(e), but changed his mind and left the word unfinished (?).

feerræsendo (repentia) 125, 16. Not elsewhere recorded. G. has evidently understood repentia (reptiles) as something "sudden"; see B.T. Suppl., "rushing impetuously," and cf. Lindisf. Lk. 8, 33: mið ferræs (impetu).

fegernis' (pulcrę) 3, 12. Repetition of the gloss to honestatis in preceding line.

frō giflęve (affluit) 81, 6; frō may be a mistaken rendering of prefix af-. Yet the whole glossing is confused, and L. ablative prudentia seems to be glossed as a nominative.

gifrēmedo (sceomo gifrēmedo, contumelias affectos) 107, 14. The corrupt L. text (see Note) has led G. to translate something like contumelias effectas.

gifremnissv̄ ł (affectibus) 18, 9; tohigvng ł gifremn' (affectus) 18, 14. There is in D.R. an evident confusion of affectus and effectus, as well in the L. text as in the glossing. The word (gi)fremnisse is=effectus 9, 13. 16, 21. 63, 9. 68, 2. 105, 15; = affectus 18, 9. 14. 41, 6; the word tohigvng=affectus 7, 14. 18, 14. 31, 21. 43, 2; =effectus 35, 19. 63, 9.

freo (liberi) 195, 2. The L. word means "children."

f'efroefrend ł (proconsul) 190, 9. A mistaken and hesitating attempt to translate the L. word "etymologically" (consolari).

begætt ł (penetrauit) 91, 1. Perhaps confusion with impetrauit, cf. 17, 14.

ongann (giscean ł ongann, inituit) 45, 9. See Note. L. inituit incorrectly for enituit (gl. giscean). In writing "ongann," G. seems to have been misled by initium.

gigeafiga (prestolari) 20, 8. G. may have misunderstood præstolari as præstare (B.T.).

geafona ðoncvncgo (gratias agimus) 38, 3. Careless rendering of L. text.

gihefgindv̄ (ingrassante) 102, 20. G. seems to have thought of ingravante, cf. 5, 15. 49, 14.

hondgiwoerc (manufactum) 21, 4. L. word an adjective, but glossed as a noun. The corrupt L. text 100, 2: manufactis, gl. hondgivoercv̄, explains such a misunderstanding.

hræcing (detentio) 65, 13. L. detentio has the meaning of commoratio (Forcellini). G. no doubt thinks of tendere, O.E. ræcan; see B.T. Suppl. s.v. ræcing, and Ritter, Arch. 113, 186.

hvnt: to hvnte' (aduenial) 117, 2. Confusion with uenatione, gl. hvnte, in the same line. There is no other instance recorded of a noun "hunt" in O.E., and N.E.D. gives no example of the modern noun hunt earlier than 1375. Yet the existence of an O.E. noun "hunt" is possible, although (Wb., B.T.) hvnte may be an abbreviation (with curl omitted) of hvntvnge.

gilehta' (recenseat) 7, 15. G. has probably thought of words like accendere; cf. 163, 21.

g i l i c b i s e n o (imitatores) 12, 6. Glossed as if imitationes, cf. 50, 2. 91, 20.

m a c a (fadores aec gimaca ðæm maca, patrisque compar unice) 165, 6. G. has evidently not understood unice (Wb., B.T.), and the glossing is faulty and obscure. But see the correct glossing 164, 2.

m e g s c i r e (of megscire, decurio) 193, 10. G. has thought of de curia (Wb., B.T.).

m e r s v n g e (fauore) 8, 21. Meaning curious; careless rendering possible (fama ?).

m i c l a ł (qualitate) 39, 16. Glossing obscure. G. seems to have thought of quantitate.

n e b b (nardus) 4, 6. G. has probably, misled by the context (nardus mea dedit odorem), thought of L. naris. See Ritter, Arch. 113, 186.

n e d r e h t (. . . . . dæg, debitum . . . . . diem) 89, 14. G. has glossed debitum as a noun, not observing the following diem.

n i ð æ f e s t (zabulus) 192, 2. Stevenson printed "niðærfest," but there is no trace of an -r- in MS. Evidently parallel glosses (without a "ł"): nið, æfest. G. has either not understood L. word, or given it a symbolical rendering.

o n d e t e n d v̄ (confessionibus) 62, 8. Glossed as if confitentibus.

o n d v e a r d v̄ (absentibus) 174, 1. Confusion with præsentibus.

o n r a d (inequitare) 119, 10. Glossed as if a noun, unless G. meant to add a supplementary verb.

r i c s a r e s (dominationes) 113, 10. Personal rendering of L. abstract.

r o t n i s e (merore) 41, 3. (tristitia) 69, 17; girotsiað ł (contristant) 56, 10. By the side of these words are found: vnrotnise (merore) 105, 4; unrotsiga (contristari) 12, 16. B.T. Suppl. remarks to D.R. 56, 10: either geunrotsiað or ungerotsiað should be read.—Yet the fact remains that D.R. shows an evident uncertainty as to the meaning of rotnisse, girotsia.—A special attention should be paid to the curious glossing rotnisse (tristatus) 193, 15. G. has no doubt thought of tristitia (but 193, 17 tristatus is rendered with ridenda). L. tristatus (see Wb.) is a false reading for tristatae ; the whole passage is taken from St. Jerome's Commentary to Ezechiel, Lib. VII, Ch. 23. Cf. Ritter, Arch. 113, 184.

g i s c æ p ' (habitum) 103, 16. Probably rendered as if habitus had its abstract sense, not the meaning "dress."

t o s c e a d o n (deferimus) 89, 1. G. seems to have thought of differre.

s c e o h ð o n g v̄ (calligas) 58, 6. Confusion of caligas and corrigias.

s c e o m f v l l (uerecundia) 110, 2. There may be a mark of abbreviation wanting (sceomfvllnisse ? see Wb.), but it seems more probable that G. has confused uerecundia with uerecunda.

s c e o m i e n d e (rubeta) 125, 14. L. rubeta is a venomous toad. G. has associated the word with rubescere.

s c i l d i n g (tutum, sc. habitaculum, gl. wvnvnise) 100, 2. L. adjective glossed as a noun.

s e d v m (semitis) 36, 6. Confusion with L. semen (see Wb.).

s i n g a l (tido, diurna tempora) 164, 18. Confusion with diuturna (?).

s m y l t v m (sinceris) 7, 11. 16, 19; smylte ł bliðelic' (sinceram) 48, 14. smyltlic' (sinceris) 9, 2. It is conceivable that G. has confounded sincerus with serenus; cf. 98, 4. 99, 17. 123, 2.

g i s o m n a d e s t (colligasti) 101, 9. Looks like a confusion of colligare and colligere.—gisomnadest (collocasti) 104, 2; confusion of collocare and colligere. A curious gloss is gisomniga (amplificet) 42, 21.

g i s p i l l a (usurpet) 109, 20. L. word probably misunderstood. Elsewhere in D.R. gispilla glosses dissipare, perdere.

v n s t y d f v l n i s ' (infestatio) 122, 12. Glossing hardly adequate. G. may have thought of infestus in the sense of "unsteady."

s y n n a (pectorum) 98, 3. Misread as peccatorum.

g e t r i v o (idoneos) 87, 14. L. word misunderstood, or very freely rendered.

u n t y n a (inhiare) 34, 11. Elsewhere in D.R.=aperire. L. word perhaps misunderstood.

g i ð i i ł (exipiat) 85, 19. G. seems (hesitatingly) to have been led by the context to gloss the word like the common proficiat.

(g i) ð i n g v n g v m (intercessoribus) 73, 16. 124, 19. Carelessly glossed as if intercessionibus.

g i ð o n c v̄ ł (supplicibus) 18, 4. Seems miswritten for giðoncl̄v, cf. giðoncle ł (supplices) 4, 12. The meaning supplex for giðoncol is somewhat strange (elsewhere in D.R.=intentus, gratus). Note the added "ł" in both instances.—g i ð o n c o l o (ðe ve vnbindeð, grates tibi exsoluimus) 124, 7. G. has mistaken grates for grati; vnbinda seems a rather mechanical rendering of L. expression. Cf. vndoa (absoluere) 117, 4.

ð o r f e n d e s (pueris) 95, 11. Evidently misread as pauperis.

v n g e ð v æ r n i s e (uecordia) 163, 2. Has G. thought of discordia ?

inwode ł (inlustras) 29, 13. Cf. gieondfær (inlustra) 15, 5, where a word of corresponding sense glosses the same L. word. Note in both cases the added "ł."

f'awlit ł (fassciculus) 4, 7. L. word evidently misunderstood. Ritter, Arch. 113, 185, suggests confusion with fastigium. It seems, however, more probable that G. has seen in the L. word some derivation from facies.

ymbwoending ł (uegetationem) 17, 1. (conuersatione) 63, 4. In both cases a misunderstanding of the L. word is probable. In the second instance G. may have thought of conversione.

voepengiðræcc (frameam) 168, 3. Translated as if meaning "encounter (or clashing) of arms"; see B.T. and H.

giwoeria (detegere) 103, 2. Confusion of detegere with tegere is the more probable as the correct noluerit (see Note) has been altered to uoluerit.

woest'es ł (extermini) 86, 9. L. word perhaps understood as "desert."

ayped (sie aypped, experiatur) 70, 5. The compound "ayppan" not elsewhere recorded. Probable confusion of experiri and aperire.

4. Some rare or difficult glosses.

aefne (materiam) 116, 20. Not elsewhere recorded in O.E. N.E.D., s.v. evene, gives quotations only for the period 1200–1423, and assumes adoption of O.N. efni.

aldgeddvng (giðæht' ðin aldgeddvng, consilium tuum antiquum) 1, 5. See B.T. Suppl. s.v. gidding. Meaning of the word clear, but the rendering of the common L. adjective with this nominal compound is rather strange.

bæðdæg (epiphania) 2, 1. Quite clearly written in MS. (Stevenson printed bæd dæg). An interesting gloss to Epiphany ("bath day"). On the association of Epiphany with the celebration of the baptism of Christ, see article "Epiphany" in The Catholic Encyclopædia (New York, 1907, etc.).

giberbedo (bvlas ..... giberbedo, murenulas ..... uermiculatas) 4, 3. Not elsewhere recorded. B.T. compares O.H.G. furbēn, furbian (see fürben in Grimm's Deutsches Wörterbuch), but neither meaning, nor form, is in favour of this supposition. Schlutter, Eng. Stud. 43, 338, thinks the word may be miswritten for a "giwerbledo," which word, however, is hypothetical. Jordan, Eigentüml, p. 83, suggests that "berban" may be an early loan-word related to L. barba in the sense of "barb."

boens$\bar{v}$ (supplicem) 72, 1. In Wb. explained as probably a shortened form (with curl omitted) of the common participle boensende (supplex), carelessly connected with the following dat. plur. gibead$\bar{v}$. Yet there may have existed an adject. boensum, not elsewhere recorded.

boeting$\bar{v}$ (cubilibus) 37, 1. Perhaps miswritten for bedding$\bar{v}$ (Wb.). B.T. Suppl. combines it with bætan; the oe, however, makes difficulties, and some sort of mistake is probable.

brognena (frondium) 95, 5; gibrogne ł (uirgultum) 19, 17. Found only in D.R. See Lidén, Eng. Stud. 38, 340; Jordan, Eigentüml, p. 83.

brydsceam' (or brydscean'? toro) 110, 1. See Note. B.T. Suppl. brydsceamol (?). Same suggestion Lindelöf, Spr. d. Rit. v. Durh. p. 26, and Ritter, Arch. 113, 185. Schlutter, American Journ. of Philology 21, 190, and Anglia 45, 187, assumes a Celtic loan-word -sceang. Förster, Liebermann-Festgabe, p. 172, opposes this explanation, and thinks that, if a correction is to be made, an O.E. -sæccing or -sang may be the proper word, or a loan from O.N. *sæang (Falk-Torp, Etym. norw. dän. Wörterb. s.v. seng). As the word is abbreviated and the last letter is uncertain (m or n), the interpretation will necessarily remain hypothetical.

bvlas (murenulas) 4, 2. See B.T. Suppl., and cf. Schlutter, Eng. Stud. 40, 237; Napier, O.E. Glosses p. 169.

ceir (clamor) 12, 18. etc. (7). A word found only in D.R.; see B.T. Suppl.; Lindelöf, Spr. d. Rit. v. Durh. p. 43; Jordan, Eigentüml, p. 69; Ritter, Vermischte Beitr. z. engl. Sprachgeschichte, p. 4.

cunnvnga (conactus !) 110, 1. See Note.—L. word miswritten for contactus, but may have been read or understood by G. as conatus. It is hardly possible to assume a special meaning of "cunnung" founded only upon this instance in D.R.; see Schlutter, Anglia 45, 187.

gideapadon (niolniso, eruperunt abyssi) 81, 12. A free, but intelligible, rendering of the L. expression ("the abysses became deep").

dearf (bið, ausus fuerit) 100, 19. (Stevenson printed ðearf.) See Wb., and Ritter, Arch. 113, 187. The words dearf, -lic, -scipe found 4 times in Lindisf. Gospels, see Cook's Glossary and B.T. Suppl.—N.E.D., s.v. derf gives no O.E. examples, and thinks the word adopted from O.N. But a corresponding native adjective may have existed in Northern Northumbrian, where -ea- is the diphthong to be expected.

dryge sprott (harundine) 86, 17. In writing "dryge," G. may have associated (h)arundine with aridus (?). N.E.D., s.v. sprot (sprat, spart), gives examples only from the New English period.

earðhifign ł (terebintus) 68, 16. The word generally means "ground ivy," hedera nigra (B.T., H.). For the form "ífign" cf. "ifegn" (Wright-Wülker, Vocab. 18, 38).

efnehearta' (concordię) 108, 10; efneheorta' ł (concordiam) 164, 12. B.T. Suppl. and H.: efenheort(e)? -nes? D.R. The abbreviation -ta' is somewhat puzzling, but does not seem to indicate a -nisse.

ymbfæst' (circumstantiæ) 174, 9. Probably (Wb., B.T.) for ymbfæstnisses. Not elsewhere recorded.

farniga (prosperare) 176, 13. Quite clearly written in MS. It is hardly necessary to assume a miswritten form (as in Wb., and Ritter, Arch. 113, 185), as the explanation in B.T. Suppl., s.v. farnian, seems acceptable.

feta (. . . scal reda ofer ða feta ðe ful infalleð, Rubric on p. 116). The Rubric faded and not quite easy to decipher; "feta" probably= "fato." Taking into account the contents of the following exorcism, the Rubric may mean: to be read over vessels into which something unclean falls. Cf. Sweet, Oldest English Texts, pp. 176 and 481.

firi (hæ sunt capitvlæ in lætania maiore. ꝥ is. on firi dagas) Rubric on p. 36. Stevenson printed "fifa," which, however, cannot possibly be the reading; the word is not quite easy to decipher. The passage remains obscure. Only with great hesitation I hint at the possibility of some connection with L. feriae (feria; O. Fris. fira).

gifoerscipeð (comitentur) 93, 7; gifoerscipia (. . . . . mitare, i.e. comitare, not unitare, as printed by Stevenson) 110, 9. Not elsewhere recorded. The sense "unite" (B.T., H.) should be deleted, and only "accompany" retained.

bigeon (cultus) 24, 11. Probably miswritten for bigeong (Wb., B.T. Suppl.).

begeongnise (kalendas) 189, 17. Cf. Wright-Wülker, Vocab. 476, 17: kalende, begannes; 176, 26: kalendæ, gehealddagas ł halige dagas.

hæghal (incolumis) 98, 19. 124, 8. 174, 19. Not elsewhere recorded. Etymological explanations see Jordan, Eigentüml, p. 83, and B.T. Suppl.

hagospind (gena) 4, 1 (not higospind, as printed by Stevenson).

gihaldendgiorn (continens) 45, 11 (written as one word in MS). A curiously formed compound, not elsewhere recorded.

g i h a p p i a (accumulet) 85, 15. Clearly written. Explained in Wb. and B.T. Suppl. as probably miswritten for giheapia.

h a t a (zezania) 199, 1; "hata" with superfluous h- for "ata." Cf. in Lindisf. (zizania) Mt. 13, 38 áta; 13, 30 wilde ata.

h e o l s t r v n g (caliginem) 182, 17. See Note. Ritter, Arch. 113, 186 suggests "ðiostrvng," but this is certainly not the reading of the MS. A word heolstrvng or a verb heolstrian not recorded, but heolstor, heolstrig seem sufficiently near in meaning to make our gloss intelligible.

a h l o e f a (euellas) 55, 10. Clearly written. Not elsewhere recorded. Etymological explanations see B.T. Suppl.; Ritter, Arch. 119, 178 (possible connection with Greek χλώΨ; a suggestion which Schlutter, Eng. Stud. 42, 165, adopts).

g i l a r ' (magisterium) 30, 15. Cf. miðlare ł (magisterio) 30, 19. Not recorded in B.T., H., Sw. Perhaps for (unrecorded) gilarnisse ?

g i l e o f a ' ł (legitime) 60, 8. Note the "ł." Cf. gilefedlicv̄ (legitima) 110, 9. The form gileofa' may be a shortening of the latter word (B.T. Suppl.), yet the spelling -eo- is not easy to account for.

o n l e s e n d (Nemar) 198, 6. The gloss (=redeemer) evidently in harmony with the following words (i.e. christus iesus). For Nemar see Ritter's suggestion, Arch. 113, 189 (Hebrew word for panther, a well-known symbol for Christ in the Physiologus). Cf. the O.E. Physiologus, ed. A. S. Cook (Yale Studies in English, vol. 63), p. 8.

l v s t v m e (uoluntarie) 28, 7. (sponte) 94, 11. Regular form in D.R. for "lustum." This dat. plur., being practically an adverb, may have by analogy adopted the adverbial ending -e.

g e m e o d n i s s v̄ (dignitatibus) 192, 19. No doubt for (or from an earlier) gemeodvmnissv̄. A mark of abbreviation may be missing.

m i n d ł (diadema) 92, 5. Not recorded in B.T., H., Sw.—Schlutter, Americ. Journ. of Philology 21, 189 (and Eng. Stud. 38, 6) points out that the word is a loan from O.Irish, an explanation adopted by Förster, Liebermann-Festgabe, p. 160.—See also N.E.D., s.v. mind, sb.[2] m o n i g f a l d ' c o s t (clænsvngv̄, multimodis purificationibus) 121, 14. Either for monigfaldvm costvm, or abbreviated for monigfaldlicost (cf. monigfald'cor, for -licor, copiosius, 46, 17). In both cases syntactically unsatisfactory.

r e h t g i b r o ð r o (germanos) 57, 4. Not recorded in B.T., H., Sw.

r e h t l e f e n d ł (catholicha) 116, 22. See in B.T some closely related words for "catholic" or "orthodox," such as rihtge(lifende, -lifed, -leaffull).

g i s c æ p (sexu) 51, 4. Stevenson has giscæf, B.T. giscæf(t). Yet giscæp is the unmistakable form of the MS.

g e s c í r ł (actionem) 187, 9. Stevenson printed gestír, and the word is given in B.T., H., Sw., as gestyr. But the MS. reading is most decidedly like gescír. Moreover, styria, etc., have in D.R. regularly the vowel -y-, and the accent denotes a long -i-. The word seems to be =ge+scír, "office, charge." See hehsciremenn (procuratores) 193, 6; and in Lindisf. sciremonn (procurans, dispensator). L. actio often has the meaning of "public function."

s g y t i l a (momenta) 171, 21. See B.T. and H., s.v. scytel, and Ritter, Arch. 113, 187.

s l i t e n d v m (discordantibus) 177, 1. As "flitendvm" would no doubt give a better meaning; s- may be miswritten for f-.

s o e s t ' n v m (sororibus) 176, 8. Only example of the word in D.R. —Sievers, Angels. Gramm.[3] §284, Anm., puts it=soesternvm. The form seems due to some analogical influence, unless -n- is simply miswritten for -r-.

s p i l æ g (se ætt'ne, spilagius) 125, 15. An adaptation of the L. word (see Jordan, Eigentüml, p. 83). Not elsewhere recorded. Explained in Sw. and H. as "a kind of snake." Yet (cf. Ritter, Arch. 113, 187) spilagius is probably a faulty spelling with -i- for -a- in the first syllable. Du Cange, Glossarium, gives spalangius=musca venenosa, and spalangia=araneæ species.

s t v r t e n d e (exiliens) 57, 13. Sole ex. recorded. Cf. B.T., Sw., H., N.E.D., s.v. start, and Jordan, Eigentüml, p. 75.

s y n n; note the interesting gradation 170, 6. 7: peccata, synne; crimina, hehsynno; scelera, divblica synna.

t i d o (ubera) 3, 19, but titto 4, 8. Lindisf. has titto, Rushw.[2] tito. No other instance with a -d seems recorded, and the form "tido" may be faulty.

t u n v̄ (turribus) 176, 7. See Note. Stevenson has "turv̄," which form has found its way into the Dictionaries, but there is no doubt as to the reading "tunv̄." O.E. tūr (tower) is thus recorded only in very late portions of the Chronicle.

g i ð y l l (scendende, aura corrumpens) 121, 19. No other instance recorded (B.T., H., Sw.). For explanations of the etymology see Schlutter, Eng. Stud. 38, 7. 295; Förster, Liebermann-Festgabe, p. 172; and Jordan, Eigentüml, p. 120 (who refers to O.N. þylja, to chant or murmur in a low voice).

g i v æ l d (comam) 96, 14; givæld ł (commam) 96, 2. Schlutter, American Journal of Philology 21, 190, and Eng. Stud. 38, 7, sees in this word a loan from Celtic. His explanation is doubted by Förster, Liebermann-Festgabe, p. 172, who is inclined to see in the word a figurative expression ("die Kraft seines Hauptes"). B.T. Suppl., s.v. geweald, gives hesitatingly the meaning "covering," referring to an instance in Aelfric's Lives of Saints.

(a-, be-, gi)w æ r l a 19, 20. 39, 13. 121, 4. 18. Found also in Lindisf. and Rushw.[2] See on this verb Ritter, Arch. 113, 187.

f r ō v o e s e n v̄ (absentibus) 178, 18. No doubt miswritten for voesendv̄ (Wb., B.T. Suppl.).

w y n n v n g (zezania) 199, 1. See Lindisf. winnung, wynnung, windung; Rushw.[2] winnung.

w y r d e, Rubric on p. 114. See Note. May stand for "wyrðe," being (cf. Sievers, Angels. Gramm.[3], §377 Anm.) co-ordinated with present subjunctive "maege."

NOTES.

The Durham Ritual having generally been quoted, in glossaries and philological works, with the numbering of pages and lines of Stevenson's edition, it has been found convenient to preserve in the new edition the arrangement of pages and lines of the earlier one. This has been done even where Stevenson's text, in some matters of slight importance, does not follow the practice of the manuscript; so e.g. in giving a strophical arrangement to the Latin poetical texts (pp. 111–112, 131–132, 135–138, 162–166) which in the MS. are written as continuous prose, and in printing as separate headlines a certain number of rubrics, notably in the unglossed portion of the MS. and in the pages 173 sqq. of the printed edition, which in the original are not separated from the bulk of the text.

The LATIN TEXT has been printed in strict accordance with the MS. Evident false readings and mistakes have not been corrected, but will be observed in the notes below. Only in a few cases where a Latin word is disfigured by the omission of a letter such a letter has been inserted within brackets. The punctuation of the MS. has been reproduced as closely as possible. The common contractions of the Latin text have been expanded. The particles autem and enim are printed in italics where the MS. uses the well-known notes of abbreviation for these words. The cases where est is represented by the not uncommon abbreviatory sign have not been specially indicated; instances are to be found, e.g. 8, 11. 10, 7. 12, 4. 11. 19, 14. 20, 6. 21, 5. 22, 6. 12. 25, 2. 26, 11. 12. 28, 1. 5. 31, 21. 102, 9. 192, 5. 6. 193, 10. 194, 9. 11. 20. In some cases (cf. pp. 15–33 of the printed text) initials are missing, being very often indicated in the margin by ordinary letters. In such cases the initial has been added in the printed text within brackets. Where, instead of the regular unmistakable contractions for deum, dominum, the MS. has only a "d" with a mark of abbreviation, a "d'" has been printed in our edition, e.g. 2, 8. In the UNGLOSSED portion of the MS., notably p. 132 sqq. of the printed text, Latin words at the end of the versicles, etc., are sometimes not fully written out, but more or less clipped. Such clipped forms have been left unaltered in the printed edition, but the complete forms of the words will be given in the notes below. Where clipped forms appear in GLOSSED portions of the MS. (chiefly pp. 166–184), they have been printed in their complete form, the most striking abbreviations being pointed out in the notes. The numerous LATIN RUBRICS of our MS. have been, in accordance with Stevenson's practice, printed in capital letters, independently of the varying type of writing used in the MS. The contractions in the rubrics have not been expanded, but indicated by the use of an apostrophe as a substitute for the wavy stroke of the original. These rubrics abound in curious scribal blunders.

In the glossed portions of the first part of our MS. (pp. 1–126 of the printed text) numerous corrections have been made in the Latin text in red ink by a later hand, perhaps the hand of the glossator. In our edition the Latin text is reproduced as thus corrected without any special indication of the corrections, nor would a complete enumeration of the corrected passages be of interest or value. Very frequently the corrector has added a tag to an " e," thus making it " ę," i.e. the equivalent of Latin " ae " (æ). The corrected forms generally accord with the accepted rules of Latin spelling, so e.g. quę, 1, 8. 4, 9. 6, 11. etc.; pulcrę, sanctę, vitę, 3, 12. 13; myrrę, 4, 7; multę, 5, 5; suę, 7, 14; continentię, 8, 10; tenebrę, 12, 10, etc. Occasionally, however, the corrector makes a mistake, as in the vocative sanctę, 36, 16, and a few other instances. Very often the corrector has added letters which have been negligently omitted in the Latin text. Examples of such corrections, with the corrections indicated by italics, are: generat*ione*, 3, 18; do*mi*nantes, 13, 18; prote*gen*te, 17, 11; misere*re*, 18, 4; repellet, 20, 9; intro*i*uit, 21, 6; terre*ni*, 33, 18; cir*cum*det, 34, 4; exsurgen*tes*, 37, 1; iu*di*cium, 92, 9; fiduc*i*a, 93, 9; *im*munditia, 97, 14; exo*r*cizata, 100, 15; *in*corruptarum, 104, 15; exor*n*ari, 105, 10, etc. Sometimes the correction has a grammatical import, e.g. magnifica*vit*, 78, 14; senti*a*mus, 54, 6. In thesaurizavit, hereditavit, 45, 17. 18, a red " v " is written over a black " b " (-abit). In " cui " 125, 12. " c " is written over " q " (qui), etc. Syllables or words erroneously repeated by the writer of the Latin text have generally been underlined in red ink or otherwise deleted by the corrector; thus lętantem, 97, 8, has been corrected from lętantantem; colimus, 51, 5, is written twice in the original Latin text; before passionis, 23, 14, the Latin text has originally an erroneous passio, etc. A few instances, where the correction as compared with the original writing offers some interest with regard to the glossing, will be discussed in our notes below.

The GLOSS has been printed in the closest possible accordance with the original. No emendations of evidently miswritten forms have been attempted. The gloss has been reproduced as it stands in the MS., and the corrections observed which have been made by the glossator himself, who in numerous cases (all of them mentioned in our notes below) uses dots, generally two but occasionally only one, to mark a deletion, and sometimes makes additions over the line. The common letter " w " has been used for the runic character of the original. When the words " day " or " man " are, in the MS., indicated by the well-known runic symbols, our printed text gives dæg and monn in italics. The glossator sometimes adds a case ending to the runic symbol. Where no such ending is found in the MS., our edition leaves the word uninflected even if the context would make us expect a genitive or dative case. As is generally the case in Old English interlinear versions, the Ritual gloss is exceedingly arbitrary in joining or separating the parts of compound words or words with prefixes. In this respect some degree of normalising is necessary in a printed text, though it is not always easy to avoid some slight inconsistencies.

The gloss of the Ritual abounds in abbreviations and contractions. These are indicated by the glossator by the use of curls or strokes placed over the abbreviated word. There are two different types of curl used for such a purpose in our manuscript. By far the commonest of the two is a waved stroke of somewhat varying shape and size. The other mark is a short, slightly rising stroke with vertical tags at both ends, the one to the left pointing upwards and the other downwards. The latter sign is a common and well-known mark for an omitted m, and is, indeed, used in the Ritual gloss exclusively for this purpose. It is, however, by no means regularly used in every case where an m is omitted, such an omission being very often, indeed much more frequently, indicated by the common waved stroke. In his choice between the two signs as marks for the omission of an m the glossator does not seem to follow any fixed principle. The waved stroke is no doubt most often used when the dative ending -um (-vm) is abbreviated, but even here the other sign is very far from rare, and frequently enough two datives in the same line of the gloss are marked with different signs; such instances are to be found e.g. 48, 11. 56, 18. 63, 1. 76, 12. 17. 78, 14. 168, 17. 170, 3. Where an m is omitted within a word the second of the two marks described above is probably more commonly used, and so also is the case in the preposition " from,"

but here, too, no consistency is observed. In our printed text the method adopted by Stevenson has in the main been applied, i.e. a short horizontal stroke has been placed over a vowel after which an m (and nothing but an m) has been omitted. These cases are as a rule perfectly clear.

Stevenson's practice has been adopted also in printing the common apostrophe for the waved stroke of the MS. in all other cases than the one just discussed. A few words may be necessary in defence of such a practice. The shape and notably the size of the waved stroke varies considerably in the MS. Its length sometimes corresponds to one, sometimes to two or more letters of the gloss. Even if it had not been strictly impossible to imitate in print the sign used by the glossator, the typographical difficulties would have been very great and the result in the end far from satisfactory. Little is therefore lost, and a great deal is gained in clearness of printing, by abandoning any attempt to reproduce the sign used in the MS. and replacing it by the simple and easily printed apostrophe.

The glossator does not seem to have followed any clear principle with regard to the PLACE he gives the waved stroke when used as a general mark of abbreviation or contraction. In the vast majority of cases there can, however, be no doubt as to the interpretation of his intentions. Very often the stroke is written over the last letter of an abbreviated word or prefix. But hardly less common are the instances in which the stroke is not placed over the last letter, but over a letter more or less distant from the final one, even where it is quite evident that the stroke is meant to indicate the clipping of the end of the word. To give a few examples, in the abbreviated -nis (printed -nis' in our edition) for -nisse, -nise, etc., the curl is sometimes placed over the "s," sometimes over the "i" or the "n," frequently written large enough to cover two or more letters. In the shortening "ve bid'," for "ve biddas," the curl may be written over the "d" or over any of the preceding letters. In the abbreviated genit. plur. of "apostol," 30, 14 (where only the ending -a is omitted), the waved stroke is placed over the third letter of the word. In all these innumerable cases the apostrophe has in our printed text been placed so as to indicate in an unmistakable way the character of the shortening; thus it regularly stands at the end of the abbreviated word where one or more final letters have been omitted. Any other method would have led to useless complications or confusion.

Numerous as are the waved strokes which the glossator had to write, it is hardly more than natural that he should have occasionally omitted a necessary curl, or—and these cases are rather frequent—written a stroke without any intelligible purpose, perhaps only as a kind of flourish. Instances of omitted curls are, e.g. broð (for broðro), 12, 3; allm (for allmæhtig), 23, 1; wvt (for wvtedlice), 57, 17, and a few more. Our printed text in these cases faithfully reproduces the writing of the original. So also in the numerous instances, some of them rather puzzling, in which a curl is written without any apparent meaning. A few examples may serve to illustrate this irrational use of the waved stroke. A curl is placed over the last letter of some nom. acc. sing. forms like wop, 44, 10; fiond, 98, 11; friodom, 105, 2. So also over one of the last letters in some genit. sing. forms in -es, e.g. gidvoles, 34, 14; hæles, 35, 4; wæstmes, 105, 9; ymbstondennisses, 182, 9. Further over some genit. plur. forms in -a (here, possibly, at any rate in some cases, meant as a mark of contraction for a weak form in -ana, which is common in the Ritual); so e.g. over synna, 40, 11; swinca, 40, 15; fyra, 100, 10; scylda, 105, 9; bloda, 169, 1; biboda, 171, 4; ðohta, 192, 11. Adjective forms with apparently meaningless curls are genit. plur. haligra, 93, 5; dat. plur. lytlvm, 86, 11; weak gen. sing. masc. ðæs heista, 88, 6, etc. Some cases of particular interest will be mentioned in the notes below.

In the following notes the abbreviation "c.f." signifies "corrected from." An "r." (used only in notes referring to the Latin text) means "read," i.e. indicates the probable correct reading of a faulty word or passage. A "for" is often used with the meaning "miswritten for." "L." means "Latin"; "Vulg." is the Latin Versio Vulgata. "Migne" stands for the edition of Gregory the Great's Liber Sacramentorum, etc., in Migne's Patrologia Latina, vol. 78 (c.=column in Migne). The abbreviation "Greg." refers to H. A. Wilson's edition of the Gregorian Sacramentary (London, 1915), and "Gelas." to the same scholar's edition of the Gelasian Sacramentary (Oxford, 1894). "Franz" signifies Adolph Franz, Die kirchlichen Benediktionen im Mittelalter, vol. i–ii (Freiburg, 1909).

Many cases in which the glossator has added in the gloss—over (rarely under) the line—an omitted letter, offer nothing of interest and will not be enumerated in our notes. The following instances of this kind of correction may be noted, the added letter being indicated by italics. For an added h or v (u) the glossator often uses symbols well known in mediæval MSS.: 5, 3. iv*e*ro; 5, 12. gifyll*d*est; 6, 4. lic*h*oma; 7, 14. eftnivuw*v*nges; 14, 6. f'hæf*t*nise; 15, 11. gi*h*elp; 16, 8. gif*e*asta; 21, 2. *vn*a-
